"A GREAT CEMETERY" SAYS TELEGRAM TO THE POPE FROM BISHOP OF MARSICA

ROME, Jan. 16.—How severely the Marsica district, in which Avezzano was located, suffered in the quake is told in the following telegram from Monsignor Bagnoli, bishop of the diocese, to Pope Beendict XV.:

"The Marsica diocese has been transferred into a great cemetery. Avezzano and Capelle and Paterno were razed and almost all inhabitants were killed. Of the Ecclesiastics some are dead; some wounded. A few villages in the diocese are immune, but generally desolation reigns. It is an immense and distressing catastrophe."

Pope Benedict sent the following reply:

"Being the father of all the faithful, but first of the unfortunate, I am pierced with grief by the immense misfortune. I extend my arms to unhappy children and am praying for peace for the dead and comfort for the survivors."

SEIZE DACIA, IS DEMAND OF BRITISH PRESS

LONDON, Jan. 16.—Seizure of the steamship Dacia, a former German ship, which now flies the American flag, if she sails from her present neutral port, was urged upon the British government today in editorials of British newspapers. Excerpts from editorials follows:

Evening Standard—The expectation is that the Dacia will be stopped by the British navy during her forthcoming voyage, taken into port and her case brought before the prize court, so that her status can be definitely determined. This probably will happen because it ought to happen.

What the prize court can do is to express, with the help of the British navy, Britain's view of the transaction and the purposes regarding it. There is no wish on this side of the Atlantic to interfere with American rights, but there is every intention to make sure that the work of our navy shall not be rendered abortive. America's respect for us is not likely to be increased if we sit down and watch the Germans securing by guile what they cannot achieve by force of arms.

If a solution is thus found the difficulties under which the rubber industry has labored during the prohibition of rubber exports will no doubt be considered highly satisfactory on both sides of the Atlantic.

Westminster Gazette—If the Dacia can be turned into an American ship in this way and allowed to trade directly or indirectly with Germany, similar transfers may be made of all the German ships at present in American ports. The effect of that would be to deprive us of one of the advantages of sea power to which we believe we are legitimately entitled.

2 CHILDREN AT CLINTON DROWN; TWO MISSING

CLINTON, Jan. 16.—Monica Grady, ten-year-old daughter of Police Officer Patrick Grady of John street, and Annie Hester, ten-year-old daughter of Martin Hester, were drowned today in Big Pond while playing on the ice near the culvert of the Boston & Maine Railroad. Both bodies have been recovered. Search is being made for two other children, supposed to have been in the party.

Hearing the screams of Harry, twelve-year-old son of Patrick Kittridge, Patrick Moran, telegraph operator of the East tower, rushed out and saw Harry struggling in the water about a hundred yards away. Plunging into the water, Moran succeeded in reaching Harry, who was going down for the last time. Charles Moran, brother of Patrick, was on the ground with a ladder and rope and rescued both after a hard effort.

The children were playing on the ice with their sleds. Agnes and Marion Sheridan, daughters of John Sheridan, who are supposed to have been in the party of children are missing.

The accident happened near the culvert of the railroad, where the water passes in a swift current from Nossy pond to Big pond. It is considered a dangerous spot in winter on account of the thin ice in that section.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 16.—Billy Sunday's married daughter, Mrs. Helen Haines, and his two sons, William A. Sunday, Jr., thirteen years old, and Paul Sunday, seven, arrived here today and will stay with their father and mother during the rest of the campaign.

"It's campaign in Philadelphia has been most successful so far," said Billy today. "But it has been hard on me."

Sunday preached at the Tabernacle this afternoon "On Martha and Mary," as his topic sermon tonight will be "Three groups."

Every member of the Sunday party is looking forward to the Washington visit on Monday. The party will leave in a private car attached to the 8.32 train over the Pennsylvania railroad.

Avezzano Surgeon Tells How He Worked 15 Hours to Dig Family From Ruins of Home

SORA, Italy, via Rome, Jan. 16. (Bulletin)—Seven hundred bodies of earthquake victims have been recovered here and the work in the ruins has covered only a small section of the town. Fifty of these bodies were taken out of the Carra Palace.

Only a few of the victims have been found alive. The work of digging into the ruins went on all night by the light of torches. None of the inhabitants who escaped with their lives will return to the ruins. They are camped in the open outside of the town. Many women have been driven insane by their suffering.

ROME, Jan. 16.—Among 600 earthquake refugees who arrived here early today from Avezzano were Count Filippo Resta, Countess Resta and three of their young sons.

The Count personally rescued his family by digging for fifteen hours in the ruins of his residence, one of the finest in Avezzano. A fourth son was also saved.

Count Resta is a physician, and after digging out his family he joined the relief force working in Avezzano. He gave the first definite account of the destruction of Avezzano. He said:

"The first shock was felt shortly after 2 o'clock on Wednesday morning. It was sufficient to arouse the family, but as no more tremors followed immediately all returned to their beds except myself.

FELT THE HOUSE FALLING.

"I had gone through the rooms picking up some articles that the first shocks had shaken to the floor and was sitting near a door when just before 3 o'clock the vibrations began with terrific violence. It was like being upon the sea when the water is rough. The earth waves were undulating and were of such force that the strongest buildings tumbled down like houses of cards.

"I felt the house giving way and I could hear the creaking of the walls; then the crash of falling beams and plaster. Instinctively I leaped toward the doorway, and as I did so I heard the roar of falling wreckage behind me. I uttered a prayer in my heart for my family, but I knew that in such a disaster they would have little chance to escape death in their beds.

"The street and the gardens in front of my residence seemed to be rising and falling as though some mighty force beneath the surface of the earth was pressing upward and outward. I was thrown from my feet, so strong were the undulations which accompanied the tremors, and on all sides I could hear the crash of falling masonry and the cries of men, women and children aroused from sleep. Some, like myself, who had been aroused by the previous shocks, had not returned to bed and they owed their lives to their precautions.

DEATH CUT OFF WOMAN'S CRY.

"I was badly frightened, but my senses took note of happenings around me which came vividly to my mind afterwards. For instance, I remember hearing a woman's scream cut short in the middle as though she had been quickly killed.

"As soon as the quaking had ceased I began to tear at the debris of my home, but even waiting for daylight. I worked like one possessed. I was careless of my torn hands and the blood that dripped down over my nails. I felt no fatigue. The thought kept running through my mind: 'I must get them before they suffocate.' I knew nothing that passed around me. I felt no hunger. I was temporarily out of my mind. For fifteen hours I struggled, tearing at the stones and beams like a madman. Then assistance came. When told that I had been working continuously for 15 hours I would not believe it at first."

CARRANZA LIFTS EMBARGO ON OIL

LONDON, Jan. 16.—According to a news agency announcement, General Carranza has notified the British Foreign Office that the embargo upon the exportation of oil from Mexico by English concerns has been lifted.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—Great Britain's strong protest against the closing down by General Carranza of the oil wells owned by her citizens in the Tampico district has given rise to the belief that the United States government will adopt a more vigorous policy in Mexico than has heretofore characterized its dealings with the strife-torn republic. Government officials believe that serious complications may result over the attitude of the Carranza regime, and it is feared that Great Britain's protest is but the forerunner of demands from other foreign nations having interests in the republic that the United States protect the property of their subjects, or these countries will themselves take steps to protect their citizens.

GERMANS CROSS THE AISNE, IN ATTACK ON SOISSONS BIG GUNS SHELL THE CITY

The Germans have crossed the Asne to the south, according to a Vienna report today and are preparing to attack Soissons. A Paris dispatch says they are now bombarding this city.

The German and Paris official statements, issued today, make no mention of these facts, but state the battle in the battle in the vicinity of Soissons is still raging. Both sides claim gains in various parts of the battle front from the coast to Alsace.

In the eastern war zone the Russians are reported to have massed a fresh army of 800,000 for a new offensive in northern Poland.

England continues preparations to meet the German invasion peril. United Kingdom farmers have been forbidden to sow corn and other grains that might be of use to an invader and fortifications are being rushed along the entire coast line.

FIRE AND STARVATION NEW HORRORS OF ITALIAN QUAKE

By BRIXTON D'ALLAIRE, Boston American Correspondent.

ROME Jan. 16.—Fire and starvation today added their horrors to the great earthquake disaster. Flames have broken out in several of the towns wrecked by the quake and many persons trapped in the ruins of their homes have been burned to death.

The Italian troops sent into the stricken district to succor the injured and unwounded survivors have been unable thus far to reach all the ruined towns, and in these scores of women and children are perishing for lack of food.

After receiving reports from twenty-five towns today Premier Salandra stated that 26,186 had been listed as dead. At that time there remained thirty-five of the shattered towns and villages to hear from.

Avezzano is a town of the dead, not of the living. Under the wreckage lies practically the entire town population of the ill-fated place with the exception of the few who have been dug out by the soldiers in their native towns and are spurred on to additional efforts by the hope that they may be able to save relatives or friends.

A graphic picture of the conditions at Avezzano was given today by Lieutenant-Colonel George M. Dunn, military attache of the United States Embassy at Rome. He was in charge of the automobiles that took to Avezzano the blankets contributed for the relief of the sufferers by Mrs. Thomas Nelson Page, wife of the American ambassador.

"The devastation at Avezzano was the most awful my eyes have ever witnessed," he said. "We entered Avezzano at what had been Napoli street. Down as far as the piazza Torlonia there was a single house standing on either side of what had been the town's main thorough fare."

Working night and day among the ruins to save those imprisoned by heaps of debris, the Italian troops are performing heroic deeds. More than 500 soldiers have been hurt more or less severely in the great task that is being performed.

In many places the debris was seven and eight feet high, so that no person could have lived in the street even if they succeeded in escaping from their homes. The same was true of every other street in the unfortunate town. There is not a single private dwelling or public edifice that is not a mass of crumbling ruins. I discovered only three buildings intact and these were stables.

TEN ALIVE IN DEBRIS.

"I found many rescue parties working to save those entombed alive. In two houses near the Piazza Torlonia ten persons were found still alive. The soldiers set to work to save them as soon as they heard faint cries coming from the debris.

"In the other parts of the towns we saw gangs working with frenzied haste to free victims with whom they could already communicate. I saw two persons released from the wreckage after many hours work. They were in a pitiable state for lack of food and water.

"It has been impossible to bury the dead. All efforts are being concentrated on the rescue of those still living. As fast as the corpses are taken out they are laid in long rows and covered from the sight.

"All this sounds horrible and I dislike to tell it, but as a matter of fact the horrors is so great that it cannot be adequately described."

Lieut.-Col. Dunn praised highly the work of the soldiers and the members of the Italian field hospital corps detailed to Avezzano.

"Though working under the greatest difficulties, they are accomplishing wonders," he said.

"Scores who are now alive would have perished but for their efforts."

Lieutenant-Commander Charles R. Train, the American naval attache here, took a relief automobile of the United States Embassy into the Liri River valley and returned today with the most encouraging news that has been received from Sora.

"I left Sora three hours ago," he said. "The officers superintending the work there told me that the fate of the inhabitants was not as bad as had at first been reported.

"Though the town was practically destroyed, the great majority of the inhabitants escaped and are now returning to see what can be saved from their former homes.

"Early reports from Sora had said that from 500 to 4,000 had been killed. All along our route, continued the American naval officer, who was almost worn out, we saw nothing but devastation. At Arsoli, west of Avezzano, the homeless are being cared for in a concentration camp. We distributed blankets freely and the survivors thanked us heartily. I never shall forget the ghastly scenes that I witnessed."

Rumors were received here last night that the Liri River had flooded Avezzano and had drowned many of the survivors there. Premier Salandra stated today that no confirmation of these rumors had been received and that he doubted them, as the town lay considerably above the river.

The Premier expressed his gratitude to the efforts of the American embassy to relieve the suffering among the survivors.

"The situation is well in hand now," said the Premier. "We were able to work systematically in this emergency because of experience gained in former disasters and only unforeseen obstacles can hinder the work of relief that is being pressed with all haste."

A cabinet meeting was held this morning. It was decided that the money appropriated at the first session after the earthquake would be sufficient for present needs.

FITCHBURG, Jan. 16.—Following his participation in the dedication of a State armory here, Governor Walsh announced he was preparing to send to the Legislature next week a message on the need of "legislation to permit a thorough reorganization of the Boston & Maine Railroad system."

"It is not my intention to present a bill to the Legislature," added Governor Walsh. "I shall ask only for permissive legislation which will give the Boston & Maine trustees authority to undertake a thorough reorganization of the system. It is apparent to anyone who has looked into the situation that it is of prime importance that the system be reorganized. Except under most extraordinary conditions the trustees have no power to proceed with the proper reorganization, and it is for this reason that the stamp of approval by the Legislature is sought."

GERMANS SHELL SOISSONS AS BIG BATTLE CONTINUES

LONDON, Jan. 16.—The Germans are following up their gains over the French on the Aisne by the bombardment of Soissons, according to Paris dispatches today.

Shells are dropping in the city, which is the centre of the French base of operations in the Aisne district and there are signs that the Germans may attempt to cross to the south bank of the river.

A Vienna dispatch of deep importance is the report that the Germans have effected a crossing to the south bank of the Aisne in the capture of a bridge near Missy, and are preparing to launch an attack on Soissons.

This and the new offensive by the Russians in northern Poland, where Grand Duke Nicholas is said to have massed a new army of 800,000 men, are the conspicuous points in the news of the war today.

Paris and Berlin dispatches agree in the announcement that the great battle at Soissons is raging with unabated fury. In spite of the fact that the French have been obliged to retire east of the city, Paris emphasizes the beginning of a counter offensive by the French as indicated in the capture by the French of the town of St. Paul to the northeast of Soissons. No fear is entertained in Paris that the Germans will succeed in breaking through the allied lines, even though they succeed in capturing Soissons itself. The allies advanced on the road from Arras to Lille and in the Argonne, as well as in Flanders.

The German General Staff announces the capture of six villages north of Soissons, including Currieres and Crony. The north bank of the Aisne, northeast of Soissons, it says, has been cleared of French troops.

HAMPERED BY FLOODS.

French artillery stationed on the south bank of the Aisne between Vic Sur Aisne and Cormicy, has been carrying on a violent bombardment of the German positions, throwing their shells across the flooded rivers. It was supposed here that this cannonade was the prelude to a series of fierce counter attacks by the French. General Joffre's forces are still handicapped on the Aisne by the flooded condition of the river, which makes it difficult for the men to cross. The usually sluggish stream is high and swift and sappers who try to build pontoon bridges work under a double difficulty.

Great interest is attached to the official military dispatches telling of French attacks at Ailly, south of St. Mihiel, on the Meuse, and the destruction of German footbridges at that point. This shows that the German foothold on the western bank of the Meuse south of Verdun is getting more and more precarious. The French have pushed forward their lines until they can carry on a continuous bombardment against the German trenches. If the Germans are forced to retreat across the Meuse at St. Mihiel it will release a French force of approximately 50,000 for operations in upper Alsace or against the Germans in Woevre district. In addition to this it would remove all danger to the forts guarding Verdun on the southwest—the south and the southeast.

Violent fighting continues in Champagne around Mesnil Perthes and Beausejour, where part of the army of the German Crown Prince is engaged.

In West Flanders the accuracy of the French and British artillerymen is compelling the German artillery to shift its positions constantly. The Germans have great difficulty in moving their guns through the Flanders lowlands, where the wheels sink into the soft mud to the axles.

NEW RUSSIAN DRIVE.

The Russian forward movement in North Poland has brought the Czar's forces to the Skrawa River, forty miles east of the German frontier fortress of Thorn. A small force of German infantry and cavalry was driven back at the Skrawa.

Grand Duke Nicholas now has a new Russian army of 800,000 men, and is seeking to effect a junction with the Russian army in East Prussia.

Success would menace the German troops at Mlawa and threaten the rear of Von Hindenburg's army before Warsaw.

Berlin reports the Germans have taken a Russian vantage point on the Rawka River, taking 3,000 Russian prisoners.

It is reported in this city that the Russian General Staff has reached the opinion that the Germans are preparing for a general aggressive movement to the west and southwest of Warsaw.

Staff officers say that this opinion is borne out by the fact that the Germans have removed their sick and wounded from Lodz and Piotrkow into Prussia and have changed their ammunition bases.

Furthermore, information has been received here of the arrival of large bodies of German troops in Northern Hungary and their distribution at points within striking distance of the fortified position covering the northern entrances in Hungary and the principal passes of the Carpathians now held by the Russians.

This is taken to indicate that Germans are reinforcing the Austrian troops for a vigorous effort to free Northern Hungary from the danger of further Russian advances.

AFFINITY EARLE'S NEW SOUL MATE

RECORD OF EARLE IN LOVE AFFAIRS

No. 1—In 1903 married Emilie Fischbacher, who divorced him in 1908.

No. 2—In 1908 married Julia Kettner, "Soul Mate," who discovered her "Soul Mate" title was clouded and secured an annulment in 1910.

No. 3—In 1910 Gertrude Dunn of Chicago traveled abroad with him, gaining "Soul Mate" celebrity.

No. 4—On June 16, 1911, married Helen Theodora Sidford.

No. 5—In 1913 occurred his last soul mate affair with Charlotte Herman.

NEW YORK, Jan. 16.—Ferdinand Pinney Earle, the lanky artist who brought the word "affinity" out of its dictionary obscurity and made it notorious, has come to life again near this city.

With Miss Charlotte Herman, his most recent soul mate and their six-months-old daughter he is living in the Summer cottage of his brother, Victor Earle, in the best residential section of Allenhurst, N. J., a suburb of Asbury Park.

They have been there since November 15, but the Allenhurst villagers have not known it. To the few Winter residents of the resort, to the tradesmen who have been supplying them, and even to the postoffice authorities they have been known as Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Elliott. A story was spread throughout Allenhurst that they were a couple who came here from Germany with their baby to get away from the horrors of war.

The man of many soulings at first told that story to reporters who had traced the couple to their obscure cottage. "I—Pinney Earle that affinity chap? Absurb, absurb," he said, even though his visitors were a stereporter who several times had talked with him on the occasion of his first notoriety, and a photographer who had made pictures of him then. Later he admitted his identity and said he remembered his visitor.

NO, THEY'RE NOT WED.

"Yes, I'm Earle," he said. "You've found me again."

"And the so-called Mrs. Elliott is Miss Charlotte Herman, formerly of Rutherford, N. J.?" he was asked.

"Yes. She is Miss Herman. No, we have not been married. How could I be married when my wife has not yet received a divorce?"

Earle was referring to Mrs. Dora Sidford Earle of London, England, who was wife No. 3 and will be wife No. 4 as soon as possible.

"I am going to marry her, of course, as soon as the divorce is granted and the legal time limit has expired," Earle said.

"I am sorry this thing has come out," he said. "We have been living quietly here since our return from Europe in November and I did not think there was a soul in Allenhurst who dreamed who we were. I was partly instrumental in spreading that story about my coming over from Europe to get away from the war. It was rather amusing, too, for people took it literally and thought I was a German who could not speak English."

PLANS NEW MARRIAGE.

"What are your plans as to another marriage?" was asked.

"Miss Herman and I will be married as soon as it is legally possible," Earle replied. "It is for her sake, not mine, that I regret this new publicity. It will distress many of her relatives, who are elderly persons. For my part, I'm used to publicity, and I can stand it, but I wish you would not be too severe upon me this time.

"I've been working hard these days to make a living. I've been trying to write something that I can sell. Yes, I'm a painter, but in these war days no one can afford to buy paintings, so I haven't tried to sell mine."

He was asked if he was writing a novel based on his love affairs. He laughed and declined to reply.

For his own photograph he posed after a show of reluctance, but he positively refused to let the cameraman take a snap shot of Mrs. Herman and the baby.

"I would not do that for $10,000, hard as I am," he said.

"Are you going to stay here as Elliott?" Earle was asked.

"I suppose I will stay here," he said, "but now of course everyone will know who I am."

Not many persons are in the little Asbury Park suburb just now, and few of those appear to be moved by any curiosity about the family moving of the Victor Earle family. The "Elliotts" have kept entirely to themselves, and it is doubtful if anyone has suspected them.

DENIES PERJURY CHARGE.

Earle was asked by the reporter about his third wife's charge of perjury. It was explained to him that she accused him of falsely swearing that he and she had signed an agreement of separation which had to do with the custody of their two young children before she brought her divorce suit.

"What I swore to was true," Earle insisted. "I do not believe the story about her coming over here to sue me for perjury. She is a splendid woman and for the time I am content for her to have the two youngsters. We did sign an agreement of separation in each other's presence before a London notary. I am to have the children if I wish them one-fourth of the time. The only legal action I expect is the granting of the divorce to the present Mrs. Earle."

Earle now is the father of five children. The eldest is Harold, son of Emilie Fischbacher Earle; the second, Edmund, whose mother was Julia Kettner, the first affinity; the third and fourth children are Avis and Yvonne, children of Mrs. Sidforth Earle, and the fifth, is the baby Charlotte at Allenhurst.

"Tip" Knox Forsaken by Shopgirl Bride

Effort to Mend Broken Romance Is Vain

Philander C. Knox, Jr., son of the former Secretary of State, and his bride, who was Miss May Bolier, a Providence, R. I., salesgirl. They eloped in 1910. The picture shows them on a shore ride in the South.

WOULD PROTECT NURSES BY LAW

Son of Former Secretary of State Won't Work She Declares in Statement.

Philander Chase Knox, Jr., son of the former Secretary of State, who eloped with the Providence, R. I., salesgirl, Miss May Bolier, in 1910, is besieging her apartments today in New York, begging her to return to him.

"I have left Mr. Knox this time for good," is the only answer that the former shopgirl will return to the emissaries sent by "Tip" to try to induce her to give up her idea of going on the stage and return to him.

"I have been so miserably unhappy that it breaks my heart to talk about it," she said. While the newspapers were printing articles telling how I was received by my husband's family and entertained and made much of I was really suffering terribly.

TROUBLE OVER FINANCES.

"Money is the whole cause of our trouble. Ever since my marriage my husband has been declaring he would go to work and support me. He never did. We were entirely dependent on the generosity of his parents for our support, and it was horribly humiliating. I could not stand it.

"My husband's parents were kindness itself to me. They gave us a good allowance and Mrs. Knox provided me with many fine dresses, but 'Tip' had no idea of the value of money. He was dreadfully extravagant. His foolishness in spending money annoyed his father. I dare say he grew tired of paying the bills, because a year ago he cut off our allowance.

"I left 'Tip,' telling him that if he could not work and support me I would not live with him. He begged me to return. I felt so unhappy that I consented.

"It was the same old story. He promised to go to work and cut out his extravagance, but as soon as I was back with him he took up the old life. Probably his parents blame me. But it certainly is not my fault.

"But I will never return again. I've got to make my own living. My plans are tentative yet, but one thing is certain—I'm going back to work.

BRIDE WAS A SHOPGIRL.

"For the past year we have been living on the charity of his mother. No love can stand that sort of existence. If my husband and I hadn't loved each other more than we used to I would not live with him. He begged me to return. I felt so unhappy that I consented.

Mrs. Murray, who is an excellent swimmer, swam to shore. She said the cabin, filled with gas from a leaking tank, blazed when one of the party lighted a match. Mrs. Murray was picked up on the shore exhausted.

WELLESLEY NOW FREE FROM DEBT

Following the laying of the corner stone of the new College Hall at Wellesley it was announced at a meeting of the faculty and students in the chapel that $75,000 had been given to meet the deficits of Wellesley College, so that Wellesley is free from debt and has the largest endowment of any woman's college.

The amount is, however, inadequate to meet the needs of the college, although it is sufficient to start the college off with new equipment and a good endowment. Miss Candace Stimson, the chairman of the alumnae committee, to whose untiring efforts the success of the campaign, which resulted in the raising of $3,040,000, was in large part due, gave a short address, telling how the money had been raised by the alumnae—by tutoring, cooking, giving benefits, etc. The meeting was followed by cheering and songs.

A projected torchlight procession was postponed on account of the weather.

At the corner stone laying Bishop Lawrence, president of the board of trustees, presided, and the choir sang a hymn. After the prayer Miss Shumleton, president of the college vocalized the scuttle with a trowel and dedicated the pil stone to the high ideals of the founders.

Mrs. North, a member of the class of '87, through whose influence the anonymous gift for the first building was given, formally presented the building in the name of the class of '87.

WOMEN PLAN TO AID UNEMPLOYED

A great mass meeting on the Boston citizen steps of the State House to demand action for the relief of the unemployed, soon to be held, is being organized today by the Women's Trade Union League.

While the mass meeting, according to Miss Mabel Gillespie, secretary of the league, will be primarily to urge action on Governor Walsh's recommendations for relief of the unemployed, its real object is to help the women now out of work.

Plans for the mass meeting followed the adoption by the league on Wednesday of resolutions urging immediate action.

Miss Gillespie, Julia O'Connor and Anne Withington, the last two being members of the Executive Board of the league, are directing the work of organization. Miss Withington and Julia O'Connor went to the Governor and to Mayor Curley yesterday and presented to him copies of the resolutions.

Miss Gillespie said today:

SUPPORT GOVERNOR'S PLAN.

"We realize that while many women are now out of work there is no immediate plan for the State to help them directly. But if the men were put to work on public works, it would indirectly benefit the women.

"We feel that all we can do is to urge that there be no further delay in real action. Hundreds and hundreds of women are out of work and have come out of work for two or three months. Many have others dependent on them. Their wages are so low that there is no margin for saving in any case. The relief of these women is a very difficult task.

"We have asked that a committee be appointed to consider whether there is not some public work that can be given women without crowding men out of employment. You know if you give some woman sewing to do, it simply means that some other woman is forced out of work.

"If a large number of men can be put to work it will help women immensely. The results may not be felt at once, but they will appear within two or three weeks.

"We support heartily the Governor's proposal that the State put the unemployed men to work at reclamation projects."

LEAGUE'S RESOLUTIONS.

The resolutions passed by the league, and which furnished the inception of the plans for the meeting, are:

"WHEREAS, the employment of women in industry on a large scale is dependent upon the expenditure of money by men; and many thousands of men have been unable to find work for many months, thereby withdrawing from circulation the money ordinarily expended for the needs of the members of their families and the wages of women in normal times are so low that they leave no margin for savings in time of unemployment, and working women have others dependent on them for support, and all this has been known for many years before;

"BE IT RESOLVED, that the Women's Trade Union League urges seriously upon the executives of state and city to lose no further time in setting on foot plans for relief by providing employment for men, thereby indirectly providing employment for women.

"WHEREAS, although the employment of men in private industry is not at present that will result in a certain amount of employment for women, the Women's Trade Union League urges a study of means of employment for women, in addition to that provided for men."

Selectmen Ask 3 Year Term in Brookline

The advisability of extending the term of office of the Brookline selectmen to three years instead of one is discussed at a public hearing in the Brookline town hall. LOVE IN NORDICA NOTES TO HUSBAND

GEORGE W. YOUNG, banker husband of the late Mme. Lillian Nordica.

NEW YORK, Jan. 16.—Love for George W. Young, banker husband of the late Mme. Lillian Nordica, the famous opera singer, a native of Farmington, Me., is expressed in letters released to have been written by her to him.

The letters are made public by Young to offset the letters introduced by Robert S. Baldwin, the authenticity of which is disputed by Mr. Young, purporting to show that Mme Nordica had given vast sums of money to Young and was therefore determined to give him no more than his legal share of her estate. The Baldwin letters also convey the impression that the singer had ceased to love her husband and that she was seeking a separation.

TWO SETS OF LETTERS.

Both sets of letters may figure in the legal battle over Mme. Nordica's estate.

Young says that on June 7, 1912, the day immediately preceding the date which one of the Baldwin letters bears, Mme. Nordica wrote from Denver a letter which she concluded as follows:

Of course, I am glad you are a little lonely after my departure. I was terribly, terribly sad at leaving.

Almost last night was very hard for me, but it's all over and fine. In bed today, but thinking of you at Owl, and will send good luck and cheer. Always show that I love you, George.

Your

LILLIE.

A month later from Honolulu, Hawaii, Mme. Nordica wrote as follows:

My dear George:

I cannot tell you how sorry I feel for you that you have been so harassed by business affairs and troubles of all kinds. Oh, I do so wish I could be of help to you. You must call to mind how many times I have said to you: Let me help you. Let me share your responsibilities, dear. Money is not all. We have our great love, one for the other, and no one can take that from us. Let me and me love be some comfort to you. We will walk out into the wide world hand in hand, and we will live, somehow, somewhere, happily together.

Do you not remember, George, how often I have said these things to you? You have been afraid of material losses—never. I knew you could and would win out. I knew I could help you. But you would not let me. I never felt or thought a reproachful emotion in my life. I have always had confidence in you. I could do in any circumstances. I would be in any position to help you and be strong and happy. All I have asked was to be me and my love for you and for you. I seem to have failed.

'LOVING WISHES.'

But God knows it was not because I did not love and adore you. I send you now, once again, most loving and tender wishes and kind and helpful thoughts. God will help you and He alone.

LILLIE.

From Hotorua, New Zealand, September 9, Nordica wrote:

Your letters are loving and your poetry is very sweet and pretty. I fear I am too far away, alone and unhappy, George.

All is lonely here. I wish wishes are for you at all times. You have always had them, and you always will forever. You ask me to breathe a prayer to my God. There is only one God, you know, one creator. He is with you at all times—in all scenes—at your several clubs each.

'ALL MY LOVE.'

Letters all written from New York, but reflecting letters of travel.

One of the last messages came May 1, 1911, two years before the singer's death, in which she said:

Sunshine, the kindest accompaniment, the kindest of Nordica's dearest, darling.

Condition still unsettled but hopeful. Will be glad to get away. Heart all in readiness. Heart all for home. Heart all for love. Heart all for him. Heart all for Mary. Heart over all. Heart over all. Heart that is good. All my heart for her. Keep me loved.

LILLIE.

Lethbridge Cubby, of counsel to Young, asserted in a statement that the "Nordica letters, filed in the county clerk's office by Baldwin are fraudulent, contrived and, I believe, forged."

GEORGE W. YOUNG,

banker husband of the late Mme. Lillian Nordica.

MRS. VANDERBILT MARKED FOR LIFE

NEW YORK, Jan. 16.—Traffic regulations were suspended on Fifth avenue and a Vanderbilt carriage served temporarily as an ambulance to transport Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., bleeding and all but unconscious, to a mad dash down the thoroughfare from sixtieth street to the corner of No. 661 Fifth avenue.

Only one stop was made in the fast drive, when traffic policeman Spies was called to Fifty-third street and furnished a large linen handkerchief to aid in staunching the flow of blood from Mrs. Vanderbilt's cheek. The accident, which was pronounced entirely unavoidable, happened through the carelessness of a laborer in the subway excavation at Fifty-third street. Mrs. Vanderbilt's carriage in which she was riding with Mrs. Edmund L. Baylies, had been halted by a traffic policeman. The laborer, standing beside the opening, threw a shovelful of earth upon a piece of rusty iron pipe taken from the excavation. The pipe was also thrown out. It crashed through the window of Mrs. Vanderbilt's coupe.

CRIES OUT WITH PAIN.

Hither the rusty pipe, a fragment of glass stripes Mrs. Vanderbilt on the cheek. Blood spurted out as if a small artery had been severed and Mrs. Vanderbilt cried out in pain.

The latter, frightened by the sudden accident, screamed and fainted. A physician was summoned by John Pearce, the coachman, and Fred Culling, the footman, and they carried their mistress to the carriage door.

As Pearce was being assisted Culling came to the carriage door.

As Pearce was being assisted Culling came to the carriage door.

To take no more quickly directed Mrs. Vanderbilt, whose face was now covered with blood and Culling leaped into the box and told Pearce to drive at top speed.

Mrs. Baylies, who had been conversing with Mrs. Vanderbilt when the latter was injured, did what she could to aid Mrs. Vanderbilt, but the two women were inadequate even as temporary bandages.

BORROWS POLICEMAN'S LINEN.

At the last cross street before the Vanderbilt home was reached Mrs. Baylies ordered the carriage stopped and called to Policeman Spies for linen handkerchief.

By Austin Flint, Jr., was hastily called and attended Mrs. Vanderbilt's face was six inches long and had barely missed the right eye. He found that the cut on the cheek bone, but expressed doubts of exerting a disfiguring scar. He found that the blood spread to the face from loss of blood and shock, but said no serious results were feared.

ACCIDENT BREAKS UP PARTY.

Mrs. Vanderbilt had invited several guests to dinner and to the opera, "La Gioconda," and there was no time to cancel the invitations before the accident occurred. Mrs. Vanderbilt's guests arrived in automobiles. The party was postponed, but as the news of the accident spread to Mrs. Vanderbilt's friends, a constant stream of callers to the Vanderbilt door necessitating issuing bulletins as to the patient's condition.

The police, desiring to fix responsibility for the accident, asked Mrs. Vanderbilt to make a complaint, but she refused to do so. Captain Sullivan, however, arranged a detective to sleep in the witnessing who saw the accident.

BAKERS WARNED OF LAW ON BREAD

In view of the report that some bakers are reducing the size of their loaves to correspond to the increase in the price of flour, Thure Hanson, Commissioner of Weights and Measures, has issued a warning to master bakers of Massachusetts.

The law says a loaf of bread shall weigh thirty-two ounces, and that it may be sold in full loaf, three-quarter loaf, half loaf or quarter loaf. The law further says that a notice shall be pasted where bread is sold, telling that it is sold by the loaf or in quarter parts. On request of a customer bread must be weighed, and if underweight, the dealer must make good the shortage.

Complaints received at the office of the commissioner indicate that some bakers or dealers have been cutting down a three-quarter loaf of twenty-four ounces by five or six ounces, and selling it for one-half loaf. If there has been any protest the bakers have but to point out that they are actually giving overweight on a one-half loaf. If they choose to sell it for 10 cents the law cannot restrain them.

PRICE NOT REGULATED.

The fact that the customer is asked to pay more for a loaf than before is nothing that is regulated by the law. If, however, there is an attempt to sell a three-quarter loaf underweight the commissioners or sealers are empowered to act and the law says that the fine in case of conviction shall not exceed $10.

"I want to get the bakers of Massachusetts together for a friendly conference in regard to the situation which is developing on account of the sudden jump in the price of flour," said Commissioner Hanson.

"I have sent notices to master bakers in Massachusetts to attend a conference in my office next Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

"It is my desire to secure some amicable understanding, whereby the different parts of a loaf of bread will not be decreased in size, as, for instance, the three-quarter loaf, twenty-four ounces, which some complaints allege has been cut down five or six ounces and sold as a half a loaf for 10 cents.

LOOPHOLE FOR BAKERS.

"The regular price for a three-quarter loaf is 10 cents. When the size of the three-quarter loaf is cut five or six ounces, and it is sold as half a loaf, the baker can say he is giving overweight. If this so-called half loaf is sold for 10 cents the customer is affected, as he is getting less for his money.

"The situation which is developing is an important one. It is a situation which affects thousands of people. Any reduction in the amount of bread received for the money paid will be seriously felt in many homes.

"I am very hopeful that the master bakers will view this matter as I do. I have called the conference in the hope that they may be induced not to change the size of the loaf or parts thereof, and that they will continue to give the same amounts as at present for the money."

Cabinet Members Join Lychnobites

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—President Wilson inaugurated a new custom tonight, when he called the Cabinet together for the first of a series of Friday night informal discussions of government business. He plans to continue the practice of night work.

The Cabinet was in session for almost three hours in the President's study in the White House proper. Each Cabinet officer carried to the meeting a portfolio of department papers. Later it was said that no important decisions had been reached.

The legislative situation, the Mexican and shipping questions and come routine business, it is understood, were taken up.

Rebukes Officials for Unemployment

NEW YORK, Jan. 16.—"What I have seen and heard you do today has made me ashamed of you," said the Rev. John Haynes Holmes, rebuking the members of the Board of Estimate for their attitude on the unemployment problem.

"You do not comprehend the emergency. You are purposely slow. If there had occurred a great fire, a subway disaster, members of this Board would not linger over these mahogany tables to compliment each other."

This photograph indicates that she will make a charming wife—one who can manage the domestic side of married life. Who she is, what she is—all about her, will be told in tomorrow's Boston Sunday AMERICAN.

'MAKE BREAD OR TAKE IT'—I. W. W.

Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, Joseph J. Ettor, Arturo Giovannitti and other I. W. W. workers, prominent in Massachusetts through their activities at the Lawrence and Hopedale strikes, are still active and are beginning a campaign with the slogan: "Make bread or take it."

Headquarters for this latest I. W. W. movement have been opened in New York, where demonstrations are planned in Union square, followed by a series of street and park meetings.

Under the caption "We've Started! I. W. W.," Miss Flynn issues this notice:

The Industrial Workers of the world will begin a Winter-long agitation against the social and industrial conditions which they assert are the causes of unemployment, at a meeting at the Manhattan Lyceum. The speakers are: Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, Joseph J. Ettor, Frank Hamilton, and Charles Ashleigh in English; Carlo Tresca and Arturo Giovannitti in Italian, and Philip Kurinsky in Jewish.

"Work or bread," is the demand of the I. W. W. for the tens of thousands of capable and employable men and women out of work in New York. Their program is one of protest. They assert that the Municipal Lodging House affords no relief to the innumerable heads of families out of work; that the Charities Department is a resource to which no self-respecting worker ought to be made compelled to turn, and that the Mayor's Unemployment Committee, with E. H. Gary, of the Pittsburgh steel mills, at its head, is an insult to the working classes.

For Sunday Shows in Connecticut

HARTFORD, Jan. 16.—Connecticut's Sunday quiet seems fated to be broken by the present Legislature. One of the first bills introduced in the Senate was by Senator L. R. Cheney of Hartford to allow motion picture performances on Sunday. Representative Martin of Orange introduced a resolution which would allow Mayor or Selectmen to issue licenses for Sunday entertainments.

New England Herds Shrink 20,000 Yearly

Secretary Richard Pattee reports to the New England Milk Producers' Association that cows are disappearing from New England at the rate of 20,000 a year. Milk for the Boston market brings the farmer a little more than three cents a quart. It costs him more than four cents. He cannot stand it, so he quits. Then the buyer invades new territory, gets control of the local outlet, encourages the farmers to produce at a loss as long as he can, then moves on again.

Report Boston Able to Handle South Bay

In the report of the South Bay Joint Board, which has been made to the Legislature, it is stated that Boston is competent to and is taking care of the "nuisance in South Bay." This report is signed by Edward F. McSweeney, Joseph A. Conry and Lombard Williams, directors of the Port of Boston; Allan J. McLaughlin for the State Board of Health and Louis K. Rourke, commissioner of Public Works of Boston.

EXPECT THAW TO GO TO NEW YORK

MANCHESTER, N. H., Jan. 16.—Present indications point to the fact that Harry K. Thaw will be extradited next week, the time limit of his stay in New Hampshire. On Monday it is expected that Thaw will be taken to Concord, where he will go through the formalities which will turn him over from the custody of the New Hampshire officials to New York men.

The next step will be to return the Matteawan fugitive to New York city, where he will stand ready for trial. The Clement house on North Elm street, which he leased for the Winter, will, without doubt, be subleased by Mrs. Thaw. All of his personal belongings which he brought to Manchester will be sent to his mother's home or to his new quarters in New York.

It is not known definitely just how long Thaw's mother, Mrs. Mary Copley Thaw, and her companion, Miss Lena Cox, will remain in Manchester, but it is thought they will accompany him back to New York.

Hold Weiner on Forgery Charge

Harry P. Weiner, twenty-nine, of Glenway street, Dorchester, for whom Inspector Gilbert H. Angell, who died yesterday, held a warrant charging forgery, was arrested at the Dover street elevated station with two alleged pickpockets who are held as suspicious persons. Weiner will be arraigned today in the West Roxbury Court on the forgery charge. Officers who arrested Weiner chased him a quarter of a mile.

Horse in Manhole, Fire Alarm Is Rung

When a horse drawing a city ash cart fell into a manhole on McLean street, West End, some one rung in the fire alarm. The horse came near falling on Thomas L. Symonds of No. 95 Falcon street, who was in the hole, but who escaped unharmed. The horse was pulled out by firemen with the aid of a derrick.

Moulder Burned by Fall Into Caldron

John E. Cahill, thirty-five, of No. 22 Marion road, Watertown, is at the East Watertown Relief Hospital, suffering from burns, received when he stumbled into a caldron of molten iron at the foundry of Walker & Pratt in Watertown.

Fellow employes rescued him and smothered the fire. He will probably recover.

Burglars Steal Silver at Medford

Another burglary by false-key workers was reported to the police by John J. Macdonald, who, with his family, occupies the lower floor of the house at No. 10 Leyden street, South Medford.

He found that the house had been entered and six silver knives, six spoons, some other plate and jewelry and a sum of money had been stolen.

CONFESSIONS OF A HARVARD MAN

The AMERICAN today prints the second and final instalment of "The Confessions of a Harvard Man," written by Harold E. Stearns, graduate of Harvard in the class of 1912.

The AMERICAN is able to publish these interesting confessions—the first ever written by a Harvard man telling frankly and truthfully what Harvard meant to one graduate—through the courtesy of The Forum and its publisher, Mitchell Kennerley, No. 32 West Fifty-Eighth street, New York, and London.

The first instalment of these confessions was printed in last Saturday's AMERICAN.

In the nature of things, no man looking for intellectual companionship will have precisely my experience. I think, however, he will have something very closely approximating it. And I honestly believe he will find it difficult to get acquainted with more than six undergraduates whom he can fairly think of as "big men." Of course there will be more than six, but only by happy chance will he get to know them.

Of the aesthetes and dilettantes there were scores at Harvard. Practically every student at some time or other had dilettante enthusiasms. By a dilettante I mean a man who plays at studying rather than studies, a man who is content with vague feelings about things in general as against clear ideas about things in particular. Dilettantes have few notions they will fight for, and they hold their beliefs languidly, with an air of boredom. They are "precious." Judged by the same standards that I have used in judging the six "intellectuals," I myself would have to be reckoned a dilettante in Philosophy. (Recall the old adage that a cat may look at a king.) And there was some satisfaction in recognizing that one or two of our professors would not improperly be pigeonholed in this division of civilized man. First among the aesthetes were those of the intellectual variety. These men took a few courses in Philosophy, in Economics and in Literature. They knew no subject well, and they had no firmly outlined general background. But epigrams and dogmatisms would fall from their lips with unhesitating, staccato-like rapidity. Men with big incomes helped to swell the number under this type. Then there were the artistic dilettantes, men who oftenest specialized in English, read Walter Pater, and talked of "style" until one prayed for another Carlyle to thunder against cant. There were even aesthetic radicals who toyed with Utopias, as a healthy man would toy with a spaniel. Upon Winter nights in warm rooms, and with full stomachs, they would talk of the necessity of making the poor appreciate the beauty in such an abstraction as "social consciousness."

And now the average Harvard undergraduate, in whom a democracy is naturally more interested. He is not half so snobbish as he is said to be in popular tradition. During the anxieties of "making" certain clubs and, generally, during the entire sophomore year, the Harvard undergraduate is at his snobbish worst. During most of his four years, however, he is democratic, he is generous, he is good natured. His morals as a class are, I believe, higher than the morals of any equal number of young men in the business or industrial world. Of the many men I knew, it was the exceptional man who got drunk as a regular thing, although practically all Harvard men drink in moderation, and I knew but ten men who did not smoke. Harvard men as a rule lead surprisingly clean lives. I say "surprisingly," for there is a popular tradition which upholds the opposite view. But it is the wealthy freshman who has an auto that brings by his exceptional conduct discredit on the student body in general. On the other hand, when a Harvard man went bad, having plenty of time to cultivate his vices, he usually went about the limit. It was not the custom of Harvard men to criticise one another, however; they accepted the "sports" and said nothing. It was exceedingly rare, though, if this kind of man attained any position of influence in his class.

Politics among the majority of students was a poor topic of conversation. They were not interested. Even the sham political rallies were largely excuses for the fun of carrying a torch or the excitement of marching into Boston. When a presidential straw ballot was held in a perfectly serious spirit, scores of votes were cast for John, the lunch man. In my sophomore year I soon realized that those early talks in Hollis were exceptional talks in which "Fingy Conners," C. F. Murphy and Mayor Fitzgerald, among numerous other, were discussed as human beings and their motives carefully analyzed. The contrast of Harvard with Oxford in this respect is striking, according to General Charles F. Adams. "Tradition is the determining factor," he says. "Politics are a tradition at Oxford. They play an important part in undergraduate life. How many Harvard men will tell you they are going into public service? Not one. Not a man. They'll tell you they are going into business, which means Wall Street, a broker's office, or anywhere and everywhere that they can make money."

Wherever graduate students in the Law School roomed, they contrived to stimulate a mild interest in current events, although it was amusing how the political conservatism of the Law School was like a red flag to a bull in its effect on the members of the Harvard Socialist Club. To give the devil its due, this same Socialist club was, in undergraduate life, a most potent influence for good. It was practically the only place at Harvard where contemporary politics was discussed seriously. By its invitation to anarchist speakers to come and address the students, by its continual "muck-raking" of college institutions (for example, its members discussed in college magazines whether or not the "goodies" received "a living wage") and by its frequent advocacy of co-education, I fancy it was something of a thorn in the side of the faculty. And healthy as was the influence of the Socialist club, the club was far from completely satisfying. Walter Lippmann was the only able man I knew connected with it. It was composed of the most part of extremists and faddists, men with "idees fixes," as the French say, who had personal plans in the coming redemption of the world from the grasp of capitalism. It needed a club of vigorous and able opponents to give it balance.

The least important side of Harvard life is the athletic side. Most men take enough exercise to keep healthy and let it go at that. I myself loved to play handball on cold, snappy afternoons during autumn. Then a warm shower, followed by a cold spray, in the antiquated Hemenway gymnasium made me relish dinner. In the Spring, there were scores of "scrub" baseball teams, enough of them to give everybody who wanted to a chance to play. Tennis was also popular. May afternoons it was pleasant to scull or canoe up the Charles River to Mount Auburn, or down the river under the Harvard Bridge past the long green Esplanade directly behind Beacon street in Boston. The lack of a college swimming pool was a standing indictment. If one cared at all about swimming and had not the good fortune to live in a private dormitory like Dunster or Claverly, which had their own, the continuous popping up of all kinds of new buildings—libraries, laboratories and the like—with never a word about a new gymnasium, led to ironical reflections. Most men wanted to see Harvard win in all intercollegiate matches, but except for the Yale, Dartmouth and Princeton games, this desire never became an all-consuming passion. Often during the early Fall football games, men would ask me, "Whom are we playing today?" Curiously enough, this side of Harvard—the side least indicative of the inner college life—is the very side of Harvard by which the general public knows us best. Going back to my room with Henley from the Stadium, I often thought how little that chattering crowd knew of the eternal springs of Harvard's greatness.

With all the intelligent Harvard men I knew religion was a matter for interesting intellectual argument; with but one—a sturdy Roman Catholic—was it a matter of vital human faith and of personal vision. The ritualistic and formalistic sides of religion had few defenders. I remember when I entered Harvard various questions were asked me on a printed slip. One of them was: "Have you any church affiliations?" To which I could not resist answering in the negative. This cheap flippancy of youth is not uncharacteristic of the attitude of many Harvard freshmen after their first flush of freedom from home restraints and "a little knowledge" of biology and economics. But I cannot insist too strongly it is the kind of flippant attitude which nearly all Harvard men outgrow. They outgrow it partly, of course, through the simple process of becoming more mature, but the very freedom of Harvard, its noninsistence on religious observance, are also effective in making them outgrow it. Their religious consciousness is deepened; the men that think at all come sooner or later to view life seriously and to view the religious problem as one of the most serious and far-reaching problems in life. They acquire the superficial human vices of drinking, smoking, et al., which I for one do not think a fact to be mourned. But if one does happen to mourn it, one may safely set against such acquisition the deepening of the religious consciousness. It has sometimes seemed to me that it could not unfairly be said that Harvard men, as they became less churchly, became more religious.

In general conclusion, I wish to emphasize again the main contentions of my "Confessions." It is not that the individual life at Harvard is a bad thing. It is, perhaps, the finest thing about Harvard. I am suspicious of the false homogeneity and democracy to be brought about by the new freshman dormitories where all first-year men must live. The bad thing is that men interested in intellectual things are often unwarrantably lonely. There are few spontaneous clubs to draw such men together, and able scholarship is far too much professionalized. The college itself makes little intelligent effort to bring such men together, even the faculty is a group of persons apart. And until it is frankly recognized that the best teacher may never write a long book on his specialty, this condition is likely to continue. Socrates was perhaps the world's greatest teacher, yet he wrote no books. He was a source of intellectual stimulation—a spiritual midwife—rather than a professional knowledge monger. Part of this loneliness we can justly say then is due to Harvard. And there is the bitter truth that intellectual men are rare, something due not to Harvard but to our own civilization and current social ideals. Is it any wonder that Harvard, as I said, fails to stimulate its students to take advantage of their opportunities.

For the encouragement of bad habits of work at Harvard, there is no adequate excuse the college can make. It is the university's business to see that the students work regularly and not spasmodically. It is not enough merely to preach against "cramming"; it must somehow be actually abolished, even if a radical step has to be taken, such as the doing away altogether with formal, written examinations.

Again, the lack of vigorous intellectual discipline at Harvard is something for which the college has been blamed. I distinctly remember the feeling of despair which came over me as I stood in my cap and gown in the Commencement procession, suddenly realizing how so many of us were hopelessly uneducated—we who, ten minutes later, were to be welcomed into the fellowship of educated men! Now many people have asked me if discipline is not valuable only when self-imposed, and of course it cannot be denied that discipline is more valuable when so imposed. But what is going to be done with the great body of American young men who are impatient of all discipline, impatient, most of all, of a discipline of the self? Harvard cannot be run on the basis that its students are all Nathaniel Shalers or John Fiskes. Why not make the college stand for something definite? Why not stiffen up the courses all round and make certain of the broader and more fundamental courses compulsory? I am thoroughly in sympathy with President Lowell in his removal of the pure elective system. I even wish he would go further. For a college student would have plenty of time to indulge his intellectual hobby, were all his courses compulsory.

My year of newspaper work in New York has strengthened these beliefs. The average college graduate is either insulted or thinks you are joking if you ask him if he reads Latin for pleasure. He is busy making money, and has "no time for general reading." He is a specialist and rather proud of the fact, forgetful of the truth that while specialization is a good thing economically, it is a wicked thing spiritually. About the only nexus between man and man in New York is a cash nexus. Men are drifting further and further apart. We shall not be bound together through any cheap doctrine of brotherhood, or "socialization of industry." That is mechanical, from the outside, and its propulsive force is largely self-interest. We shall be bound together only through digging deeper into our own spiritual selves, and discovering their true kinship with the deeper selves of others. I do not mean this in any mystical sense: it is an honest discovery of experience. For what binds men together is not sympathy or natural impulse, but a humanistic discipline. "Sir," Dr. Johnson once growled at Boswell, "natural affection is nothing, but affection from principle and established duty is sometimes wonderfully strong." It is the business of all universities to furnish such a humanistic discipline.

WILLARD TELLS WHY HE SHOULD BEAT JOHNSON

By ED W. SMITH.

You'll have to show Jess Willard something more terrifying than Jack Johnson's ring record to discover to him over the affair of March 6 at Juarez. That whole of a man from Kansas doesn't tremble at all at the mention of the champion's name. Rather it brings a smile to his face and it is plain to any one who talks with him for a few minutes regarding his chances that he at least is entering into the match with a fair amount of confidence.

Perhaps it is born of desperation, but at any rate he has it, and it is not assumed.

Willard has an excellent argument or two to show why he should be regarded seriously in this match. It was that way that I put it up to him the other day when we chatted about the coming battle.

"They don't take you seriously," I suggested to him, and that started Jess on a fine line of argument that shows either one of two things—Willard has a vein of philosophy in his makeup or has been carefully coached by some bright minds of the boxing game. Here are a few of the things the giant sprung on me.

BIG FELLOW CONFIDENT.

"They may consider me a joke or not, as they please," he started out. "But deep down in my heart I feel that I have better than an excellent chance of whipping this fellow. Briefly, I'll show you how we are figuring the thing out in our own way.

"To begin with, I have the greatest natural advantages in the world—everything that nature could have done for me. I'm much taller, heavier and longer in the reach than Johnson is. And that gives me the edge right there, doesn't it, all other things being nearly equal?

"You yourself told me a long time ago you didn't think any little fellow, say Langford, for instance, ever would be able to beat Johnson. On the basis of that argument you imply that it is going to take a big fellow to do the trick. Well, I'm big enough, and I feel if I'm only good enough."

"All right so far. I have it on him in size, and furthermore have the big advantage as far as age is concerned. I am twenty-seven and he is thirty-six, and some claim him to be thirty-eight, and even older. Look in the books, is it, that a man that old can go much farther?

JOHNSON HAS GONE BACK.

"He has had years and years of it, grinding at training and sapping his vitality when out of training. I'm fresh and good—never better, in fact, and rested up and primed for the biggest test of my life.

"Now, then, take the last fight. It was with Frank Moran of Pittsburgh, a little light fellow as boxers weights go now, who went the full twenty rounds. He didn't even give Moran a clean knockdown, did he? He just bested him and that's all. Don't you suppose that if I had been in Johnson's place that night in Paris I could have done a little better kicking? Do you imagine that he could go twenty rounds with me? He certainly could not.

"Here's another thing in answer to the frequent statements that I have aggressiveness and speed. This battle is to be practically to a finish. It is to go somewhere beyond the twenty-five-round stage, if we're both standing up that long. We have the conviction of acting forty-five rounds if we both can stand the pace. That release me, and I happen to know what I'm doing when I say that.

"I don't agree I'm willing to make an early finish of it. I cannot foist him in an hour's time, or he does not put me under in about that length of time.

JOHNSON'S PLAN FAILS.

"On the contrary, Johnson wanted to have a shorter limit put on it, figuring evidently that it is the only thing along the line left for him to make the fight. Should time alone decide the decision on that any point system I care to favor, I feel I have more confidence right now than he has."

Tom Halpin After Big C. A. C. Trophy

The leading track and field athletes in New England will compete in the monster track meet of the Artillery which will be held in the Symphony Street Armory on Saturday evening, January 24. With a big meet of stars battling for the premier honors, some good performances are expected.

The 600-yard Pfaff trophy race is sure to bring out some fine competition. Tom Halpin of the B. A. A., won this event last year, and the Boston Cross Country Club star will be on hand to defend his title. Halpin is also entered in the one-mile handicap, and will compete this year again and expects to repeat his triumph.

He will have to travel at a merry clip if he is to win out, as he will probably be opposed by such speedsters as Dave Caldwell of the C. A. A. and Joe Higgins of Holy Cross.

HUGGINS MUST TAKE LONG REST

CINCINNATI, Jan. 16.—The Cardinals have lost their fighting general. Worried to a state of almost nervous collapse, followed by a severe cold which threatens to develop into pneumonia, Miller Huggins has been ordered to forget the present baseball worries by his family physician, and has been informed that it will be for the benefit of his health to seek a Southern climate immediately.

From the Huggins home the information came from relatives that Huggins will leave Cincinnati in a few days for San Antonio, Tex., and remain there for several weeks. If this journey he will be able to ran down with a slight shell. He can get away from these baseball scandals and he can open plans for the Cardinals' training trip in the Texas Star State.

Huggins' condition became alarming last night, when his fever increased. Several doctors were called to the home by Huggins' attendants, his sister, and the physicians announced that the patient was suffering with a bad case of "nervous exhaustion."

A physician's dictionary fails to describe this ailment. However, to the present baseball follower this is brought on by the present ructions between organized baseball and the Feds.

No big league manager has been forced to battle the Federals as much as Huggins. Since the closing of the 1914 season he has been on the jump continually trying to hold several of his stars who have jumped to the Federals. He has made numerous trips to St. Louis for conferences with Tully Perritt, and on each journey he has been foiled by his rivals.

Then on the last hike to the Missouri town that Huggins contracted a cold in the Philippines. He was too busy to check the cold, with the result that pneumonia now threatens to grasp the gritty little fighter.

Kid Gleason Most Likely to Hang On

Kid Gleason may, as he says, be out of baseball for good, but there are those who reserve the right to doubt it.

His swan song did not sound on the square. He accepted his fate too quickly, and he is not built for a complete. To smile sweetly when kicked aside like an old shoe, after faithful service, is not in the nature of things. Gleason wouldn't have turned down the offer to manage the Brooklyn Feds had he been treated in kindly fashion, as the reports of his release would indicate.

There is a good job awaiting Gleason, and the baseball world expects to take it. The indications are that he has been "promised something."

Paul Des Jardien to Join the Cubs

CHICAGO, Jan. 16.—Paul Des Jardien, star centre of the University of Chicago football team, regarded as one of the best basketball players in the "Big Nine," will join the Chicago team of the National League in June, according to a story published here today.

Des Jardien declined at this time, it was said, to sign a contract, as he did not want to endanger his amateur standing by playing baseball professionally. He agreed, however, to sign after, as he received his diploma in June.

He is a right-hander, possesses a good curve ball and is faster than six feet gives him additional effectiveness.

"Chuck" Deal Denies Federal Report

Charley Deal, the athletic third baseman of the Braves, has denied the report that he has signed with the Federal league.

"I am perfectly satisfied with my berth with the Braves," said Deal today, "and I believe that I will be on the club's roster next season. I have not seen any agents of the Federal League, nor have I been looking for them. I saw Mr. Gaffney before he went South on a hunting trip, and I expect to see him again on Monday when he comes to Boston, and then I will probably sign for next season.

"The Rabbit's" Column By Walter J. Maranville SHORTSTOP OF THE BRAVES

Eddie Collins was recently discussing athletics in general when, as usual, the conversation drifted to the recent World's Series.

"You know," remarked Collins, "that we made one prediction on that series that I'll bet nobody is talking over this season before the first game we all agreed that it should and would be completed in four games. And it was."

Yes, Eddie, it was. You're right.

Letters from ball players are always interesting. Here is one I received the other day from C. S. Sargent, No. 23 broad street, Boston:

"I have noticed that several people that should have known the facts claim Paul Hines never made the triple play, but I have followed the game for thirty years and I remember very well the papers commenting on a description of the play and I have always told of it as being the only one I ever saw in the big leagues.

"And I never insisted it was more than that the Braves won four straight from the Athletics. Probably nobody will dispute that. It wasn't done thirty years from now.

"One would think there was no one could play ball thirty years ago. Why, I remember Bob Caruthers and Chicago about as slick inside work as is seen today the way it is described.

"Some of the old players could pitch and it would be a pretty fast game that Charlie Radbourne couldn't pitch and that Old Hoss Nichols couldn't catch and prove it by comparing them with some new star of today."

I haven't heard of a better general than Napoleon Bonaparte for some time, but no doubt there will be plenty of them before the present war is over and N. is will be a second-rater. To give some of the old players credit for knowing a little about the game and don't doubt for that the play was not made until the papers of that day are consulted, for they will prove it. I myself can remember some months that always went to make out that no one could play ball in those days.

"I have been a 33d degree fan for over thirty years and have seen some ball, good and bad. I have seen old Denny Mason stand at the plate and have seven pitched balls pitched to him sit took seven (ten) and Duke smashing his teeth because he couldn't reach the ball. There never was to this day a better player than the same 'Pop' Anson.

"Paul Hines was one of the stars in those days, both at the bat and in the field. I can remember time and again I his breaking up of games with his bat. I like to remember them—those old rollicking days. We don't want any laurels taken away from them to make out the poor ball players are the only ones that can play ball."

Sport Questions and Answers

Sporting Editor, Boston AMERICAN:

Please decide the following dispute.

A says that no team is in three different strings of a bowling match to give B 10 pins in the first string and 5 pins in the last two strings.

The scores of the various strings, adding B's handicap, were: First string, A 101, B 91; second string, A 95, B 96; third string, A 98, B 102.

There was not any mention of what would be the result if there was a tie in any of the strings.

"HARVARD SQUARE."

B wins, as A did not beat him in all of the three strings. He only tied him in the second string and according to the original agreement A had to capture all three strings in order to be declared the victor.

One of the books in Spalding Athletic Library, which can be secured at any sporting goods establishment, contains the rules for the broad jump. The take-off board is the place from where the distance is measured. It is immaterial that the mark was made by one of the spikes on the forward part of the jumper's shoe.

Sporting Editor, Boston AMERICAN:

To settle a dispute state if the Arena hockey team is rated better than the seven representative teams that the Arena defeated? Also give standing of those six teams here and not yet played.

A. M. Malden.

We are going to answer the second part of your question first. The B. A. A. and Arena sevens were scheduled to play on January 5, but the Universities called off the contest as there were charges of professionalism against several members of Fred Hoey's speedy aggregation. The A. A. U. solons have since given the Arena players a clean bill and the two sevens will meet next Tuesday. As to which seven is the best, that will be decided by the coming series, but on the form shown by the two have a little bet down on the Arena baud when the series gets under way.

Sporting Editor, Boston AMERICAN:

What was become of Arthur Pelky? Is he still in the field games?

TAN.

Pelky passed from the limelight shortly after he was knocked out by "Gunboat" Smith in San Francisco on January 1, 1914. He engaged in several minor bouts after losing to Smith, but did not receive much popular rewards for his efforts. Pelky has not been heard from for sometime, but we believe that he is located somewhere in the Northwest near Calgary, B. C.

DE LUCCA-WOOD TO MEET IN RING

By JACK CONWAY

PATSY DeLUCCA, one of the honorable land marks in the dear old North End, and Bay Wood, the Fall River boxer, were signed today to exchange punches in a twelve round bout before the Granite City A. A. in Manchester, N. H., next Tuesday night. Eddie Mack, who is managing DeLucca's business affairs, informs us that he intends to keep his star pugilist busy within the hemp ropes for the rest of the Winter.

Mack also matched Charley Shepard to meet Larry Burns in the semi-final bauble of eight rounds. Both of these boys weigh close to the lightweight limit.

The Manchester club has put on some good shows this Winter and seems to be one of the few small organizations around the New England circuit which are able to make both ends meet.

CONSIDERABLE interest is being shown in the series of inter-city bouts which will be conducted by the B. A. A. in Mechanics building next Tuesday night. Some of the leading amateur boxers and wrestlers in this section of the country will test their skill and ability against the pick and choice of the "simon pure" boxers of of New York and Brooklyn, and close, full fisticuffs are expected to result.

James Gorman, who will represent Boston in the 115 pound class, has made a good record as an amateur. He has beaten Jack Harmon, Carlo Arduini, Jack Charles Fullerton and J. McAuliffe, the last mentioned boxer hailing from New York. Gorman's only defeat was received in a contest with Pat McCarthy of Roxbury. McCarthy, by the way, will also be there with bells on Tuesday evening, battling for dear old Boston.

GEORGE BROWN of the B. A. A. informs me that the New York and Brooklyn boxers will probably arrive in this city late Monday afternoon. This will give them an opportunity to rest up before they will be obliged to enter the ring. Brown is entrenched at No. 25 School street, room 17, each day between the hours of 11 a. m. and 2 p. m., where members of affiliated with the B. A. A. U. may secure tickets for the inter-city encounters.

GILBERT GALLANT of Chelsea is the world's lightweight champion! Never knew this, did you? Well, only goes to show that you have not been reading the sport pages very closely during the past few days. Here is how we "dope" Gallant out as the champion. The Chelsea boy defeated Leach Cross decisively on two different occasions. Young Shugrue then goes out and defeats Freddy Welsh and Charly White, the latter having previously bested Willie Ritchie.

Then along comes Cross and upsets Friend Shugrue according to Freddy Welsh's account of the New York bout. Therefore, if Gallant can beat Cross, who disposed of Shugrue, while the latter bested Welsh and White, how can any fan hold that he is not the world's lightweight champion? Some reasoning, eh boy?

EDDIE KEEVIN is lining up his Hibernian army to wage a merry battle to finish six round boxing matches in Massachusetts. The writer is not in favor of short bouts, but if they would be much better than no ring battles at all, which is almost the way conditions are just now. The law governing boxing in this State is a joke, and a promoter is not able to operate his club with any feeling of certainty that he will not be interfered with by outside authorities if there was a boxing bill in Massachusetts, the present unsatisfactory condition of affairs would cease.

What Club Pays Lajoie's Salary?

"That Connie Mack has not assumed the entire contract of Lajoie is a belief based on the fact that the Cleveland club made that sort of an arrangement with the St. Louis club last season, but Lajoie thwarted the transaction by refusing to go to St. Louis.

"Cleveland wanted to get rid of Lajoie, but while there were several clubs that were willing to take him, all balked when they learned the veteran was drawing $9,000 a year, and that his contract did not expire until

We watched as he wabbled and wheeled;
His feet weren't mates as he stood on his skates,

The motions he made as he swooped and he swayed

FREDDY WELSH IS DODGING SAYLOR

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 16.—An overabundance of respect for Hilburn Saylor's wicked left punch has caused Freddie Welsh to do some extraordinary sidestepping. The champion showed his aversion to trouble with Saylor recently by declining a date before the Olympia A. A. in Philadelphia. He explained his reason for refusing to box the Hoosier lightweight by saying that he personally did not like Ray Bronson, Saylor's manager. This appears to be a rather frail excuse and Bronson is up in arms.

Welsh had agreed to box any lightweight that could be procured by the Olympia A. A. for a January 29 date. Harry Wigmore, acting as representative of the club, wired Bronson asking for Saylor's services against the champion and the former willingly assented. The match was practically made, but when Welsh discovered that he was scheduled to meet Saylor he immediately called off hostilities. The telegram from Wigmore read as follows:

"Welsh will not fight Saylor. Declares he does not like his manager. That is his only alibi."

From this one might infer that the champion has never forgotten the event of the stomach and the champion was on the canvas for more than twenty seconds.

Saylor challenges Welsh to a contest any time and has financial backing to the extent of $5,000 that he can knock out the Englishman in less than twenty rounds.

Daniel A. Noonan has disposed of his holdings in the Lawrence club of the New England League to Joseph A. Sullivan. In the final for Mrs. Manson's trophy Mrs. George C. Dutton advances to meet Mrs. C. H. Hanna of Cleveland.

Mrs. Dutton won from Mrs. W. F. Smith of Oakley, both playing scratch, by seven and five and by three and two from Mrs. Artemus Holmes of Stamford.

In the women's consolation Mrs. John Shepard, Jr., on a five and three win from Mrs. E. J. Rhiney of Montclair, advances to play Mrs. H. R. Mallinson of New York. John Shepard, Jr., of Belmont won a keen nineteen-hole match in the second division consolation final and Artemus Holmes of Weeburn also brings the second division trophy to New England.

Likewise in the third division consolation F. C. Henderson of Woodland Club scored for the old Bay State with a nineteen-hole win from A. S. Brownell of St. Andrews.

Harvard tackles Princeton in New York tonight and one of the best college games of the season is looked for.

The Crimson squad leaves Cambridge early today, but will not practice in the St. Nicholas rink this afternoon as had been planned for originally.

On paper the teams are fairly well matched, but the Crimson will undoubtedly be at a slight advantage on account of the size of the rink at New York, which is considerably smaller than that on which the Harvard team has been practicing.

Princeton has played five games, winning from Cornell, Massachusetts Aggies and Williams, but meeting defeat from Dartmouth and the B. A. A.

Harvard has victories over Technology and Cornell, but was defeated by Queen's College and the B. A. A.

THE FIRST BOOK OF TAD'S "INDOOR SPORTS" Ever Published JUST OFF THE PRESS

BOWLERS IN GREAT RUSH FOR PRIZES

The first week of the Boston AMERICAN candlepin bowling tournament was a howling success.

Hundreds of bowlers from all parts of Greater Boston, both men and women, enrolled and sent in their scores.

Already many have sent in their scores for the second week, which began last Thursday midnight and which ends next Thursday midnight.

The roll-off for the men's prizes will be held one week from today. The exact time of the roll-off, the place and the ten men who rolled the highest three consecutive strings, thereby qualifying for the roll-off, will be announced in tomorrow's Sunday AMERICAN.

No roll-off will be necessary to decide the winner of the special women's prize. The woman having the three highest consecutive strings will be awarded the prize.

MANY BIG SCORES MADE.

A one string roll-off for men was decided the best, as it will give all a fair chance.

The Contest Editor and his corps of assistants have nearly completed their work of sorting out the high ten men for the first week and the winner of the women's prize.

A surprisingly large number of big scores have been turned in.

The managers of various alleys have made application for the weekly roll-off. They all agree that the tournament will prove a big boost for bowling.

Miah Murray, proprietor of the Murray & Irwin alleys on Washington street, writes as follows:

I think your idea of a weekly contest a splendid one, filling a long felt want among the bowlers of Greater Boston. I congratulate the AMERICAN on its foresight and enterprise in being the first Boston newspaper to bring the bowling game into its proper place as a major sport. May you have the complete success you deserve.

An earnest worker in the success of the tournament is "Mel" Turner of the Dewey square alleys. "Mel" has enrolled more than one hundred bowlers to date and expects to bring in many more. Fred Williams, manager of the American alleys, is another who has worked untiringly in the interest of the tourney.

Only one enrollment in the contest is necessary. This will be put on file, and the bowlers can send in their scores every week without sending an enrollment coupon along also.

It costs nothing to win a prize and as this is the biggest and most extensive bowling contest—or series of contests—ever held in New England, it is important that each and every bowler send in his or her enrollment blank as early as possible.

The following prizes will be awarded each week.

First Prize	$20.00
Second Prize	10.00
Third Prize	5.00
Special Woman's Prize	5.00

The prizes will consist of merchandise. You can have anything you want at any store you choose to the value of the prize won and the Boston AMERICAN will pay the bill. The merchandise prizes are given to protect you against becoming professionals.

In order that the largest possible number of bowlers will have a chance at these weekly prizes no prize winner will be eligible to compete in succeeding contests after the one in which he wins a prize.

This eliminates each week four of the best bowlers, so that those whose ability may be a little below that of the prize winners will still have an opportunity.

WHARF FIVE AFTER TITLE IN SUBURBAN

By J. P. MURPHY

NOW that Rowe's Wharf is again in good standing with the Suburban League powers-to-be, it is up to "Red" Miller to make good his word and go out and capture that gonfalon.

* * *

SOME time ago "Red" said that his team would win the championship. Later he got "in a hole" by using three City League men in two of his matches. This is one more than the Suburban League allows. The two teams that the matches were rolled against, Chelsea and Bazaar, protested, and on the re-roll "Red's" quintet lost six points.

* * *

IN spite of these set backs, however, Rowe's Wharf is still within hailing distance of the leaders, and "Red" still contends that his team has an excellent chance to win the title.

* * *

BY consistent work, the Cocs and Young rollers have finally taken the lead in the Retail Shoe League. Their jump came as a result of a four-point victory over the E. W. Burt five, with whom they were tied for first place.

* * *

"IT is generally admitted," said a Worcester man today, "that Jack Munsey is years ahead of the bowling game. He has tried more experimenting than any man I know of. Jack always has a new pin or a new ball of some kind that he's trying out. He is one of those fellows who get an idea and then tries to carry it out—many times with success."

* * *

"JACK, you know," continued the Worcesterite, "has an abundance of natural bowling instinct. It is said that he can turn his back to a bowler and tell by the resounding crash of the wood just how many pins have fallen."

* * *

A young man who claims to be well versed in all things bowling, has suggested a match between the Chelsea team of the Suburban League and the Chauncy "wreckers" of the City League. He evidently overlooked the fact that Archie Walsh is a member of both teams, or probably thought that Archie would be able to emulate, to some extent, one, Dinny Callahan of Somerville, who is said to have bowled and beaten a whole team single-handed.

* * *

ONE more good man would greatly help out the Back Bay team of the Columbus Club League, for Albert McCarthy is rolling a pretty game, and with a little aid could probably boost his team to a higher notch than it now occupies.

CONDON of Elm Hill, is keeping mighty close to the individual leaders in the Columbus Club circuit.

The Fortunes of Fanny

Fanny Tells Her Employer That She Can Stay There No Longer

By Virginia Terhune Van de Water

CHAPTER XLIII.

Copyright, 1914, by Star Company.

AFTER breakfast the following morning Fanny knocked timidly at her mistress' door. When she obeyed the summons to "Come in" she found that Mrs. Irwin was not alone, but that Mr. Irwin's sister was sitting there sewing.

"What is it, Fanny?" Mrs. Irwin asked kindly.

With downcast eyes and a voice that trembled, Fanny said that she had decided to leave when her month was up, day after tomorrow.

"I think I'd better look for another place," she explained.

Mrs. Irwin flushed indignantly. "I suspected all along that that was what you meant to do," she declared. "That's the way with all of you inexperienced girls. You take a position, give the lady no end of trouble teaching you, then, as soon as you think you know a little something, you try to get a place with higher wages.

Fanny ventured a gentle remonstrance. "Oh, no, ma'am," she protested, "indeed that is not my idea. You have taught me a great deal and I am grateful to you for it—for I know I was very ignorant when I came here. But I am not thinking of the wages at all."

"I should hope not, indeed!" Mrs. Irwin retorted. "For you certainly are not worth a cent more than you are getting—although I did intend to pay you $2 more next month if you did well. I suppose, then, you are leaving because you and Della have quarrelled."

Fanny did not reply to this charge and her mistress changed her accusation to a question. "You are leaving because of a quarrel with Della, isn't you?"

"I think," Fanny evaded, "that I could be happier if I could go where I could have a room to myself."

"I wonder," Mrs. Irwin said sarcastically, "that you have not suggested my giving up my guest room for your use. Yes—you can leave, and welcome! But—remember—I will give you no reference. Since you are leaving me in this high-handed and ungrateful way, I will treat you just as you are treating me, and consider my own convenience before yours. Moreover, I would recommend to you, my girl, that no is so unsettled and as discontented as you are. Understand? Do not give my name to anybody to whom you apply for a position."

MRS IRWIN OFFERS OR OWN NAME

An hour later, as Fanny was dusting the lower hall, Miss Irwin came downstairs and paused to speak to her.

"I am sorry," the spinster said, that you are going away—but I can understand your attitude. I've often thought myself that if I were a girl in service I would find it hard to have to share my room with anyone else—and relinquish all evidence of privacy. But Mrs. Irwin has not perhaps thought the matter out as fully as I have. And she has really been very kind and patient about teaching you."

"Yes, ma'am, indeed she has," Fanny acknowledged. "And really I am grateful for what she has done, and I'm sorry she feels as she does about my leaving."

Miss Irwin hesitated. "You never lived out before—did you, child?" she asked abruptly at last.

"No, ma'am," Fanny confessed.

"I thought not," Miss Irwin said. "Perhaps," she added in a low tone, "if you want a reference you would like to give my name and address."

"Oh, thank you!" Fanny exclaimed. "You are very kind, Miss Irwin."

"Not kind at all," said the lady, "only I can imagine myself in your place—that's all. But, you know, all employers don't understand."

A night's sleep seemed to have sweetened Della's temper, for she spoke pleasantly to Fanny that morning and made no reference to the trouble of the previous night. Fanny met Della's overtures half way. She could afford to be magnanimous now that she was going to leave. She did not tell Della of her intention until late that afternoon. The cook looked almost shocked at the news.

"Sure, Fanny," she asked anxiously, "you'll not be after leavin' on my account, will you? It's a very bad thing for one girl to be the cause of another girl's leavin'."

Fanny smiled reassuringly at the cook's evident uneasiness and evaded a direct answer to the question.

"I am going to try to get a place as general housework'er," she informed her. "I know how a good deal about waiting on the table, and I've learned quite a bit about cooking from watching you since I came here. Of course, I know how to cook some things even before that."

"Oh, it's higher wages you're after, is it?" Delia looked relieved. "Well, I don't blame you much."

FANNY STARTS OUT FOR A NEW SITUATION

"The safest way to get a good place is to go to a first-class intelligence office," she told Fanny. "Then you're pretty sure of gettin' with decent folks. Of course, you'll have to pay a fee at an office; but its dangerous answerin' advertisements. You can't ever tell what kind of rough place you'll get into through advertisements."

Fanny remembered how many advertisements she had already answered, and all had come through safely. But, now that she knew she had incurred a risk, she was afraid to do so again.

Thus it came about that the next day after transferring her trunk from Mrs. Irwin's to the basement of a lodging house in which she was to spend the night, Fanny Hedden registered at an employment agency and gave Miss Irwin's name as that of a person who would vouch for her good character and ability.

A Caged Bird

By STELLA FLORES

Copyright, 1915, by International News Service.

WHAT a woebegone little bunch, sitting dejectedly on the perch of his cage! Not even a big sugar lump will he notice. And the young couple watch with panic in their hearts, fearing the little love-bird will die. If only some wise one would tell them that he cannot live in a cage! Hedged in with little exacting demands, he soon loses his happy spirit. For love is a hardy, home-loving little fellow. He adores flitting about the window-sill, yet never has a thought of flying away. It is only when caged that there is any real danger of that. For then, even if his prison is a lovely one, some day he will find the door open. And he seldom comes back if once he escapes.—STELLA FLORES.

THEIR MARRIED LIFE

Warren Buys an Automobile and Helen Gets a Terrific Surprise

Copyright, 1915, International News Service.

HELEN smiled as she hung up the receiver. Warren had rung her up to ask her to come down to dinner and then take in the automobile show. Ever since Warren's show of enthusiasm in the Fall Helen had been amused. She felt that they ought not to afford an automobile, but still if Warren wanted one, and if they went to the automobile show, he would be sure to want one, why she would never be able to persuade him that they were not in the wealthy class.

Besides, why absolutely they have one? Lots of people had one who never kept up half the appearance they did. Helen was very particular about appearances and had said to Warren more than once, while he laughed lovingly, that no one could ever say anything about them in the matter of living.

At her dressing Helen made herself as attractive as possible. She was on the point of leaving once when she went back and changed her waist for one with a pointed collar that would come out beyond the fur of her coat and give her a fresh appearance. She smiled more than once as she thought of Warren's impatience if he were here, and then, finally, snatching up her gloves and her purse, she hurried out and was in the elevator before she could change her mind about anything she was wearing.

At dinner Warren was gay and full of information regarding the latest models. Helen was silently amused but she pretended to be interested in everything he said and Warren, flattered by her close attention, made himself as attractive as possible.

They were having the nicest time that Helen had ever remembered. Usually something happened to spoil things and made Warren grouchy about something before they were half through a meal. Or else Warren, thoughtlessly, said something. Helen would lose her sparkle and sit silent and close to tears until they were ready to start for home.

"You look fine," Warren remarked boyishly.

Helen smiled. "Just the same old suit, dear."

"I know, but it looks different." And then he would go off into a conversation about the make of some car and Helen would listen attentively until his unusual good humor made him remark again about her appearance. She adored compliments as much as any woman, but Warren made so few comments on her looks that she had grown used to his way of doing things.

They lingered over their meal and when dessert came Helen said she would have crackers and cheese with him instead of anything sweet. As a general rule she did not like cheese of any kind, but she was determined to keep Warren in this delightful mood as long as possible.

"Well, are we ready?" he said finally. And as Helen slipped into her coat and pulled out her collar unceremoniously, Warren pulled out a cigaloue and perused it with seeming knowledge. Whether he really did know anything about cars Helen had no idea. It was sufficient for her that he was interested.

SHE IS AMAZED AT THE NUMBER OF CARS

Helen had never attended an automobile show, and as she entered she gave a little gasp of incredulity and looked at Warren with shining eyes.

"Isn't it wonderful?" she said softly.

"Pretty nice," he commented. "We'll walk around first and then ask about any we admire."

"But Warren, they look like awfully expensive cars."

"All cars look that way when they're new."

"Do they have all kinds on exhibition?"

"Certainly, wait till you see a few." They wandered around, stopping now and then before a little roadster. While they were deep in admiration before a shining little model Helen felt some one pull her arm impulsively and looking around met Louise's excited glance.

"Hello, you people," she said in her most engaging manner. "Come and over with me. I think dad is going to buy a new car."

"Really, Louise," said Helen excitedly.

"You don't say," remarked Warren, "I thought you had a new one."

"We have a 1914 model, but when dad gets to the show he simply goes crazy, and I do hope he gets it; then Bob and I can have the other one in a while. Bob is going to learn to drive right away."

Helen and Warren hurried after Louise as she led them across the room. Her father was standing before a huge brown touring car, the most stunning thing Helen had ever seen. It was upholstered in a lighter shade of tan and apparently was entirely complete. No little roadster for Louise's father, in spite of the fact that Louise had been the only child.

He turned as Louise hurried up with Helen and Warren. Bob, who was talking to the salesman, turned to Warren and grinned at Helen's admiring countenance.

"Pretty swell, isn't it?" he remarked.

"I never saw anything so wonderful in my life," said Helen, all eyes.

"Better make Warren consider it," said Louise's father. Helen was quite a favorite of his and he made her one of the group of interested onlookers by asking her advice about this and that.

"How much is it?" Warren asked Bob, and Helen listened with ears apart for the answer. Of course the car would be expensive, these big touring cars cost a great deal, but when she heard Bob's answer she gasped a little.

"Seven thousand without the limousine body," he remarked casually.

"It would be only six, but this is a special car with special power."

"Are you going to take it, dad?" said Louise eagerly. Her father turned to her with a broad grin.

LOUISE'S FATHER BUYS AN EXPENSIVE CAR

"I suppose so. I never go halfway with a thing, and as long as we have all done so much talking about it, I guess I'll have to say yes."

The car was marked sold and Helen heard the salesman ask if he wanted the limousine body, too. She had no idea how much that would cost as she heard the answer, yes, but she had a little feeling of envy come over her that she crushed back the next minute with a flush of shame. How could she be envious of Bob and Louise. Because Louise's father had plenty of money was no reason why she should long for it. And what reason had she to be envious of Louise, who was so sweet and generous to her?

"Well, how about it, Warren?" she came out of her thoughts to hear Bob say. "Are you going to take the plunge?"

She hoped that Warren would laugh and say no, but instead she opened her eyes wide when she heard him say he hadn't decided, but if the rest would come over and help him he might buy some kind of a wagon.

"Come on," he said to Helen, taking her arm with a little squeeze, "if Bob and Louise are going to have a touring car we must at least have a runabout."

Again she was filled with misgivings. They really ought not to afford it. Perhaps Warren was getting it only because she had looked disappointed. If only she had an opportunity to speak to him.

"Warren," she whispered tentatively, but was silenced by the fact that Louise looked at her half teasingly.

"Helen, don't tell him he oughtn't to spend the money. Let him be extravagant once in a while if he will."

Helen felt a little ashamed of her misgivings. Warren ought to know whether he could afford it. And every man hated a woman who nagged at him continually.

They all went back to the little roadster that had taken Warren's eye.

"It's a peach, isn't it?" he said, looking about with almost a possessive air. "How about it? You like it, don't you, Helen?"

"Yes, I certainly do, Warren," said Helen, a little nervously.

"She's crazy about it," said Louise, "only she doesn't like to say so."

"I think I like this better than any other here," said Warren, "so I'll an order for one to be delivered in the Spring."

Helen drew a long breath. But Warren had actually bought one. Well, they would have to make the best of it now, whether they could afford it or not. And it was with a new little air of dignity that Helen turned from the wonder of her new possession and smiled approvingly at Warren.

Congeniality a Big Asset

A Good Deal of It Can Be Cultivated and It Helps Smooth the Pathway of Life

"THE strength of friendship consists more in liking the same things than in liking each other."

Many a friendship, or love affair, or even marriage, has been shipwrecked on the rocks of dissimilar tastes and widely separated interests. Too many people who care for each other cannot analyze the reason for their feeling beyond "She's just my style," or "He just appeals to me." It is all very well to feel a tug at your heart strings and a glow in your blood when some individual is near, but if you try to build a lasting relationship on either of these symptoms you will find that the tug may pall apart and the glow fade.

Instinctively we often recognize friends-to-be or loves in embryo. Often we meet a new person and as their personality calls and ours answers, we feel "There is some one I could like"—not some one I DO like, but some one I "could" care for. And in that potential "could" opposed to one positive "do" lies the crux of the whole matter.

Instinctive attraction is a splendid thing. The charm of one individual out of a group for a certain selected other individual exists and can not be explained or put under a microscope and made perfectly clear and evident.

But if friendship, love or marriage are each or all to develop from this germ of attraction, there must be a re-inforcement of common interests, similar or at least sympathetic tastes and ideals and inspirations in common.

There is such a thing as making yourself congenial to the people for whom you care. Think how a mother encourages her boys to tell her of their victories in classroom or on football field and listens to her girls discussing their beaux and tennis courts even though her interests centre in Browning clubs or cooking triumphs. She interests herself in the tastes and occupations of those she loves and so brings herself ever closer by sympathetic understanding that makes for congeniality. The boys say "Mother's a good sport" and glow with pride when they say it. The girls lovingly whisper, "Isn't Mother a dear? She does understand." And their eyes glisten with tender tears while they think how dear mother is.

Mother is wise enough to make her boys and girls feel the congenial warmth of her love and interest.

It would be wise for friends, lovers, husbands, wives and children to garnish their affection with the delicious sauce of congeniality and serve it at the wide board of sympathy.

Not a Bird

Titian Smythe stood anxiously by as the great art critic bent over his masterpiece. That learned man, having examined the picture from every part of the studio, at last spoke.

"Splendid, my dear sir! I congratulate you on having got so much realism into your work, especially in these days of Futurists and such-like faddists. The realism and sense of depth that you have got into that impression of a coal-mine is, I assure you, my dear sir, one of the best bits of work I have seen for many a day!"

During this speech Titian's face had gradually lipped downwards.

"Coal-mine!" he roared. "You fat-headed idiot, that's a birdseye view of Blackpool!"

"Is it, indeed?" answered the critic, picking up his hat and walking slowly to the door. "Then I am glad I don't live in Blackpool, and I am even happier to think, sir, that I am not a bird!"

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

ETIQUETTE VS. KINDNESS.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

My brother is about to become engaged, and he tells my mother that it is her place and duty to visit the girl's parents first.

My mother wishes to know if this is correct or not.

My mother has been acquaintance with her people; also my father died about four months ago, and she thinks nothing of this position and the girl's parents knowing this, should visit her first. H.Z.

THE rule of society is for the mother of the bridegroom to call on the bride-to-be and offer her motherly kindness to the girl her son has chosen. So, in spite of her mourning for her dead husband, it would be kind of your mother to show her son's fiancee this courtesy.

LOVE OR FRIENDSHIP

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I met with two young ladies recently and have been keeping company with both of them. They both are far above the standard of the other girls I have met, and have no faults in any way that I can see. They both like me and are respectable and ladylike in every action. But I don't think it right to go out with both of them, and as I do not know which one I like best, I ask your advice as to what I should do.

PERPLEXED.

THERE is no reason why a man cannot have two girl friends. If you ever come to love one you will know it at once without asking you choose between them! In fairness tell each friend of the other's existence.

THE MARRIED WOMAN AS A WAGE EARNER

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Is there any shame or harm for a woman to work after she is married? I mean just for a while to get things straightened up. Have a nice position and wouldn't know what to do at home all alone anyway.

A CONSTANT READER.

MARRIED women are more and more coming to see the wisdom of working and helping their husbands bear the financial burdens. Keep on working and try to lay up something for a rainy day.

BUSINESS SHOWS BIG IMPROVEMENT

Business is better not only all over New England but throughout the country, and the improvement predicted as due to arrive with the new year is very noticeable. Mayor Curley said this week that there were fewer Boston people unemployed than in New York or Philadelphia, the two other great cities in the East.

Many concerns in Boston or other cities in Massachusetts are benefiting to some extent by the war. Foreign buying of New England products is on a large scale.

Through their London agent, Jacob Dreyfus and Sons of Boston have received an order for 100,000 flannel shirts for the British army. The same house gets an order for 125,000 suits of underwear from the same source.

Orders for khaki cloth for the allies to be filled at the Slater mills in Webster total more than 200,000 yards. The shoe orders being filled at the H. A. Corbin and Son factory amount to $800,000.

BIG SHIPMENT OF HORSES.

There is to be heavy shipments of horses for the British army. The Boston and Albany expects to land 20,000 head here, and it is estimated that the road's revenue from the business will total $138,000. The Iberian of the Leyland line will sail with 600. They came in twenty-seven cars and formed the largest consignment ever received in this city at one time. Most of these horses are large animals and intended for field artillery and wagon train service.

The Iberian will also take to Liverpool thirty-two carloads of Ford automobiles without bodies. Another shipment of the same size will be made on the Memphian on January 24.

E. C. Lynch of Charles E. Merrill and Company, now in New York after a trip through the West, found business in a healthy condition, and he reports that the demand for automobiles has made Detroit one of the busiest cities in the country.

A Western oil man says business in petroleum is larger than had been expected. There is big demand for American coal in Mediterranean ports. The Coastwise Transportation Company is having two 8,000-ton steel freighters built in New York to carry coal to them and it is understood that some large cargoes are to be landed in Egypt.

STILL BUYING TOBACCO.

The cigar business indicates that general trade is on a rising scale, for demand for tobacco signifies prosperity of wage earners and others. George J. Whelan, head of the United Cigar Stores Company, said: "The Cigar Stores Company had a better trade last year than during the previous one, and will show an increase in net earnings."

There is growing belief in England that it will be wise to treat Americans well in regard to their buying foreign ships. One Liverpool newspaper says: "The United States has goods we want to buy and is it not to our interests to help the United States get ships to carry goods to us? We are being sucked dry and bled white by our own shipowners. What we want is American competition with the gentry who have forced up the price of bread."

As to the foreign demand for New England shoes, some factories are running at full capacity to supply orders. One order for 30,000 pairs has just been received by a Marlboro house.

Fine Program at Symphony

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

There was no soloist at the Symphony concert yesterday afternoon, and Dr. Muck had arranged a program which began with the First Symphony of Brahms and ended with the "Magic Flute overture of Mozart. Its middle part contained two pieces by Oskar Fried, a German conductor and composer, who owes much of what prominence he has attained to the patronage of Dr. Muck.

Muck is not so devoted an adherent of Brahms as some conductors we have had, but he brings to the scholarly and imposing works of the latter a keen intelligence and a broad sympathy. Both he and his orchestra were in happy vein yesterday, and the result was a glorious performance of the monumental symphony.

Both the Fried compositions have been heard in Boston before. Dr. Muck has played the prelude and double fugue for string orchestra, while the Longy Club has given the adagio and scherzo for wind instruments, harps and kettledrums.

The prelude and fugue is rather a dull and ponderous affair, something to stir the admiration of the technician rather than the ordinary music lover.

The piece for wind instruments, on the other hand, is full of rich color, dainty airs and charming unconventional effects. It provoked deserved applause.

The "Magic Flute" overture was played as artistically and elegantly as it should be. Why people who go to a Symphony Orchestra concert and profess to love music should go out, leaving such a lovely work behind them, I am sure I do not know. Yet there are scores who leave every week just before the last number, no matter what it may be.

NEWS OF GREATER BOSTON CHURCHES

"Billy Sunday must come to Boston, no matter if there is some opposition to him," said Rev. Duncan A. McPhie, secretary of the Evangelical Alliance of Greater Boston. This organization will hold a special meeting January 25, in Tremont Temple, and appoint Rev. Richard Wright of Cambridge, Rev. Dr. Cortland Myers, D. D., of Boston, and Rev. Duncan A. McPhie, a committee to go to Philadelphia and present a petition from the Boston ministers to the famous evangelist, asking for his coming to Boston.

"I know there are a few ministers who do not want 'Billy' Sunday, but that was the same when Dr. Chapman was mentioned for his revival meetings in Tremont Temple.

"You couldn't get Boston ministers unanimous on any subject. Why, the idea is absurd to expect that Boston ministers would be unanimous upon the coming of 'Billy' Sunday.

"So we propose to put it strong before Mr. Sunday and to get him to make concessions about his demanding the ministers to be unanimous about his coming.

"We believe such an evangelist will do our city much spiritual good. You'll see 'Billy' Sunday here in Boston for one evening meeting some time in February. And you'll see him next Fall for a long campaign."

President Elliott Says the New Haven Is Practicing the Strictest Economy

Yet Two Lawyers Were Paid $70,000 for Legal Services in the Adjustment of the Relations Between the New Haven and the Federal Government—Just a Few Weeks' Work

President Elliott of the New Haven Railroad addressed the Public Service Commission recently on the need of enabling legislation for the New Haven Railroad during the coming year.

He told a sad story of the poverty and financial difficulties of the New Haven Railroad, with its decreasing earnings. He assured the commission that the management of the railroad was practicing the strictest economy.

Did Mr. Elliott speak the truth? The general public knows nothing of the details of railroad management and can only appraise the claims of its managers by the few facts which occasionally come to light. A very interesting fact has just been made public through that most excellent rule which was established by the commission on the insistence of George W. Anderson and which ultimately led to a combination of the lobbyists to force him off the Railroad Commission. This rule requires, among other things, that the fees paid by railroads to lawyers should be filed with the commission for public inspection. Under the obligation of this rule, the New Haven Railroad reported that it had paid to Mr. Moorfield Storey for his legal services in the adjustment of the relations between the New Haven and the federal government the sum of thirty-five thousand dollars, and that it also paid to Mr. Hines of New York an equal sum, thus making to these two men a payment of seventy thousand dollars for a few weeks' work.

Now the services which these gentlemen rendered are fairly well known to hundreds of people in Massachusetts, because they concern chiefly the relation of the railroad to public authorities. It is certain that Mr. Storey's services were not of especial value. Assuming the ability of Mr. Storey to render unusually valuable services, the conditions did not permit the display of that exceptional ability, and it must have been known to intelligent railroad managers that the conditions did NOT REQUIRE such especial legal ability.

Considering the amount of time which Mr. Storey gave to his work, his pay is many times the sum this nation pays to the President of the United States, and it is out of all proportion to the value of the services. It is wrong even for an OPULENT RAILROAD to pay such fees. It is inexcusable for the New Haven, in its present financial condition, to think of paying anything like such fees.

The managers of the road are under no illusion about the value of such services. Such enormous and disproportionate fees have a variegated history in which the STRICTLY LEGAL service plays the least important part.

Sometimes a lawyer has been hired for the sake of giving him a job, and in politics that would be called graft. Sometimes he has been hired because he is known to have influential political connections, and in politics that too would be called graft. Sometimes he has been hired because he stands well in the community and the enterprise which he is asked to father needs respectability. Is this also not a form of graft? But running through all the motives for paying these tremendous fees is the appreciation by the railroad managers that thousands of weak men in the community look with awe upon a man who is known to receive enormous pay for his work. This defect in the public standard for measuring men is thought to make large salaries increase the influence of the railroad world and to enable the railroads to keep dangling before the lawyers of influence the prospect of highly remunerative employment. This is thought to have a tendency to keep the legal profession in the railroad traces.

This theory may be correct, but the influence of the railroad world is over-great without any such addition, AND THE COST COMES ENTIRELY OUT OF THE PUBLIC.

When the people of Massachusetts get thoroughly into their heads the understanding that every dollar which the New Haven Railroad and the Boston & Maine improperly and extravagantly spend must come out of the public pocket they will stop this kind of extravagance.

In the very next column of the Boston newspaper which contained the speech of President Elliott of the New Haven Railroad before the Public Service Commission appeared the announcement of the proposed increase of fares on the Boston & Maine in the Metropolitan district. FROM BOSTON TO CAMBRIDGE THE RAILROAD PROPOSES TO INCREASE ITS FARE TWO CENTS, AND THREE CENTS TO EVERETT, FIVE CENTS TO LYNN, ONE CENT TO MELROSE, THREE CENTS TO REVERE, FIVE CENTS TO SOMERVILLE, FIVE CENTS TO STONEHAM, FIVE CENTS TO WATERTOWN, FIVE CENTS TO WEST MEDFORD AND FOUR CENTS TO WINCHESTER.

Little expeditions like this into the pockets of the travelling public always follow little extravagances like the Storey and Hines legal fees.

The AMERICAN is not inclined to criticise Mr. Storey too severely. In making his charge he is only following a settled custom. It is the custom itself which we attack. Mr. Charles S. Mellen, Mr. Elliott's predecessor, whose extraordinary ability and railroad experience his severest critics never questioned, has recently declared that twenty-five thousand dollars a year was enough to pay for ALL THE time of the BEST railroad president. Mr. Mellen KNOWS.

The public not only is obliged to pay these fees which partake so much of the nature of graft by paying higher fares and freight rates, but it suffers indirectly even more severely from the discontent, suspicion and pessimism which these things create in the community.

The President of the United States receives but $75,000 for a whole year of life-shortening labor. The Governor of Massachusetts receives but $10,000 a year for work that takes all his days and, as Governor Walsh said recently, "many evenings far into the night." The Attorney General receives but $7,000 for a whole year's labor, and the best lawyers of the State have been Attorneys-General.

The great fees paid by the public service corporations are evidence of the graft which permeates the whole public service corporation business as conducted by private interests. These monstrous fees are only one of a thousand items of the waste and extravagance which Louis D. Brandeis declared before the Interstate Commerce Commission, after investigation, cost our railroads alone MORE THAN A MILLION DOLLARS A DAY. It is

The Selfishness of Parents

"It Is Wrong for Them to Think That Their Children Should Support Them," Says Dorothy Dix

By DOROTHY DIX

WHEN parents are old and poor it is indisputably the duty of their children to support them, but it is equally as much the duty of the parents to support themselves if they can.

Unless incapacitated by age or sickness, there is no earthly excuse for a father or mother to sit supinely down, with folded hands, to be fed or clothed by some hard-working son or daughter who already finds it difficult enough to make a living. Old people, like young people, are far better off for being engaged in some active gainful occupation that keeps their interests alert and their minds occupied.

Of course, men generally do go on working as long as they are able, but middle-aged women, when they are left widows, have a way of knocking off work and going to live either with their married children, where they are almost always firebrands in the house, or else of calmly settling themselves down on an unmarried son or daughter to be supported. And mother feels she has a perfect right to do this, and that her children are a bank account that she can draw upon at will.

This is a wrong view of the subject. An active, able-bodied woman should be just as much ashamed of grafting on her children as she would be of sponging on anybody else. Because she bore and took care of them when they were little does not put them under an everlasting debt of gratitude that they can never repay. Mighty few of us are called upon to give thanks for having been born, and, having thrust life upon us, the least our parents can do is to take care of us until we are old enough and strong enough to engage in the sad and losing battle of existence on our own account.

Unfair to Children

Leaving aside, however, the question of duty between parents and children, there is no fact that stares us more uncompromisingly in the face than that fathers and mothers should take definite steps to prevent themselves from becoming burdens on their children, either financially or spiritually.

Wherever it is possible enough money should be laid aside in a sacred fund, never to be touched for any other purpose, to secure a man or woman a home of his or her own, instead of forcing him or her to be an unwelcome guest beneath an "in-law's" roof.

It is astonishing how many people neglect to do this. They go on blithely spending every cent they make, under the calm assumption that they have sufficiently provided for their old age by having children on whom they can depend when they are no longer able to work. This is most unfair. Of course, every decent man and woman will take care of their aged parents, but it is often done at a ruinous price to the son or daughter. Most men, in these days, have all of the burden that they can stagger along under in providing for their own wives and children, and when to this is added the support of their parents it becomes the last feather that breaks the camel's back.

Every human being knows that age is bound to come, and not to provide for the days when one's earning power is gone is nothing short of dishonesty, for if we cannot take care of ourselves we rob other people when we force them to feed and clothe and house us.

As I have said, men are not often dependent on their children. Women are. Not many women have much opportunity to save up enough money to make them independent, but every woman can learn some sort of a trade or profession that she can follow, should her husband die, so that she will not have to become a parasite upon her children.

Especially would I urge the woman who has established herself in business, or who has some job, not to give it up, however besought, to go and live with her children. Independence means happiness and dependence means misery, and there's a vast difference in the attitude of even the most dutiful children between mother with her own pocketbook and mother with her hand held out for alms.

There Are the In-Laws

Also there is always the son-in-law or the daughter-in-law to be reckoned with, and the son-in-law or the daughter-in-law who does not secretly or openly resent having to support mother-in-law and have her always on the premises is as rare as hen's teeth.

Yet any woman with ordinary common sense should have wisdom enough to foresee that the time will come when her children will marry and set up homes of their own, and that she should provide herself with enough outside interests to keep her going when they leave her.

The truth is, there are too many dependent parents who should be independent, and they need to get away from the idea that parenthood is a graft that can be worked to any extent. It isn't. It is an awful obligation that no father or mother can ever sufficiently fulfil.

Inklings and Thinklings

By WEX JONES

"Read a poem before going to bed," advises a Kansas paper. Surely must be easier ways of inducing sleep.

Appears that a person sometimes described as a "loon" or a "nut" is known to alienists as a "psychopathic inferior." Doesn't sound any more flattering than the others.

Swiss glaciers shrinking.—Head line. From what?

Cure for high cost of living—"eat hash." We fear the commission that doped this out is merely adding to our list of "life's mysteries."

New York woman hasn't spoken to her husband for nine years. How does he do it?

If an amateur athlete can't sell his trophies, what's the use of being an amateur athlete?

The Minneapolis Journal says of Thomas Campbell's "battle hymns" that they "volley like a great gun." Must mean Maurice McLaughlin.

"Of Cabbages and Kings"

Almost everything in the world will be discussed in the Sunday AMERICAN and discussed by experts.

Marriage—War—Babies.

All of these most interesting subjects will be discussed in the Sunday AMERICAN.

In the Sunday AMERICAN will be revealed the identity of the young woman who, for several days, has been asking readers of the AMERICAN to help her find a husband.

The girl-in-search-of-a-husband is not only young but pretty. She knows how to cook. She is an expert with the needle. She loves children. She wants to preside over somebody's home for him.

THIS appears to be the opportunity that some of our New England young men have been sighing, dying, praying for. By 10 o'clock on Monday morning there ought to be at least one bachelor less in this community.

Speaking of WAR.

Hudson Maxim, for example, one of the most famous of living New Englanders, tells us that the United States must be prepared to take on the winner of the great war. In the language of the great inventor, "WE ARE DOOMED TO FIGHT WHOEVER WINS THIS WAR!" Mr. Maxim's opinions are certainly important to say the least. An entire page of the Sunday AMERICAN is given over to Maxim's thoughts on the war and its consequences.

Augustus Peabody Gardner, the Hamilton Congressman, is ANOTHER good Yankee.

According to Captain Gardner, the standing army of this country is a standing joke. The volunteer militia, Congressman Gardner says, is another laugh.

The Representative in Congress from the Sixth Massachusetts district is NOT an alarmist. He is NOT a seeker after notoriety. Nobody has ever called him demagogue. He has been looking into our military unpreparedness. He has discovered things the country ought to know. He discusses some of these things in a notable contribution to the Sunday AMERICAN.

Then we hear from a famous New Englander whose very name suggests war and Indians and powder and the bugle-call—Major-General Nelson A. Miles.

The great hope of the future, says General Miles, lies in a World Federation—the United States of the World—as a guarantee of peace.

RUDYARD KIPLING writes of England's citizen army, continuing his Sunday AMERICAN reports of visits to the great training camps of the right little, tight little island.

HILAIRE BELLOC, by many regarded as England's foremost military authority—at least among the writing men—discusses what may be expected when the war is over.

The Sunday AMERICAN will contain two pages of war pictures, the newest, the latest, the best.

And that will be about all, concerning the war, except the war NEWS of the day and the night. (The wires will be humming until 3 o'clock Sunday morning).

George Bernard Shaw, having dropped the war for the moment, asks who will do the drudgery when the Socialistic commonwealth is finally established. (A most interesting question, answered in a manner truly Shawian by the gentleman who propounds it.)

In the magazine section of the Sunday AMERICAN we read that the Garden of Eden has been rescued from the profane sovereignity of the Turks, and the British guns now guard the entrance of the most famous spot of Old Testament history—where Adam and Eve lived, were tempted, and fell.

Also, that the celebrated Dr. Alexis Carrel, one of the most distinguished members of the laboratory staff of the Rockefeller Research Institute, has performed an almost incredible miracle of surgery, giving the right arm of a dying soldier to a French general, whose own right arm had been torn off by a shrapnel shell.

On the bright side:

Why Boston babies are the BEST BABIES IN THE UNITED STATES, and why Boston babies are GROWING better every day is told in a wonderfully interesting story by a Sunday AMERICAN reporter who makes babies his special interest in life.

On the social side:

A review of the week by "The Dowager," who writes of Boston society from the inside. Two pages of new photographs. All about the great benefit performance in aid of the Belgian Relief Fund, all about the Suffrage dramatics, and all about the ANTI-Suffrage dramatics.

On the sunny side:

The comic section of the Sunday AMERICAN will continue to keep us informed with reference to the Katzenjammer children, the Brown infant and Tige, Their Only Child and poor unhappy Mr. Happy Hooligan.

Some day we hope to be able to announce that Mr. Hooligan and Suzanne have reached the altar and at last are Mr. and Mrs. H. H.

But alas! not yet.

Finally:

To avoid disappointment speak TODAY to your newsdealer. Say to him: "Be sure to save a Sunday AMERICAN for me."

characteristic of private management of our public service corporations. It is inherent in private management of our public service corporations. No amount of public regulation will ever cure this evil.

Public ownership is the ONLY remedy, for ALL OTHERS have failed or ARE FAILING most grievously. Public ownership will not only stop this increasing extortion, but will remove one of the great sources of graft and inefficiency in politics. Thousands of men in this country go into politics to blackmail the corporations, and are welcomed by the corporations because they are easily controlled for very small considerations in the name of campaign funds or other largesses insignificant in comparison with the value of the privileges which they give away to the corporation at the expense of the public. Such men under public ownership would have no inducement to enter public life. This and numerous other sources of public corruption will be removed by PUBLIC ownership.
